PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE SENATE.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 4, 1901.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Vice-President of the United States, having taken the oath of office at the close of the last regular session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, took the chair.

PRAYER.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O Thou who from Thy throne doth behold all the dwellers upon earth, most earnestly we entreat Thee to move every heart in this assembly with the sense of Thy presence while we proceed to execute the will of the American people in the initiation of two of our fellow-citizens, according to the simple American usage, into the highest offices known to our Constitution and laws. Guard their persons from disease, violence, accident, and every kind of danger and peril. Endue them with the reason illumined and enriched by Thy divine light and love, with the will tempered by experience, endurance, and foresight, strengthened and skilled, and may the term of their office be memorable in our annals for the reign of prosperity, peace, welfare, an era of good feeling.

and may the term of their office be memorable in our annals for the reign of prosperity, peace. welfare, an era of good feeling.

To all here present let Thy blessing come in this great assembly, where are gathered so many men and women of note and mark, not only our own representatives, but our foreign guests, between whose countries and our nation may the strengthening ties of confidence, sympathy, and friendship be continually multiplied.

For the whole body of our people, for all tribes and kindreds of men, we pray that the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, may keep our hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God, and of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord. And the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be amongst us and remain with all ever more.

ADDERSS OF VICE-PRESIDENT BOOSEVELT.

ADDRESS OF VICE-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators, the history of free government is in large part the history of those representative legislative ment is in large part the history of those representative legislative bodies in which, from the earliest times, free government has found its loftiest expression. Hence they must ever hold a peculiar and exalted position in the record which tells how the great nations of the world have achieved and preserved orderly liberty. No man can render to his fellows greater service than is rendered by him who, with fearlessness and honesty, with sanity and disinterestedness, does his life work as a member of such a body. Especially is this the case when the legislature in which the service is rendered is a vital part in the governmental machinery of one of those world powers to whose hands, in the course of the ages, is intrusted a leading part in shaping the destinies of mankind. For weal or for woe, for good or for evil, this is true of our own mighty Republic. Great privileges and great powers are ours, and heavy are the responsibilities that go with these privileges and these powers. Accordingly as we do well or ill, so shall mankind in the future be raised or cast down.

We are a young nation, already of giant strength, yet whose

We are a young nation, already of giant strength, yet whose present strength is but a forecast of the power that is to come. We stand supreme on a continent, supreme in a hemisphere. East and west we look out across the two great oceans toward the larger world-life in which, whether we wish it or not, we must henceforth bear an ever-increasing part. And as, keen-eyed, we gaze into the coming years, duties, new and old, rise thick and fast to confront us from within and from without. There is every reason why we should approach those duties with a solemn approach reason why we should approach those duties with a solemn appreciation alike of their difficulty and of their far-reaching and tremendous importance. But there is also every reason for facing them with high-hearted resolution, courage, eager and confident faith in our power to do them aright.

A great work lies ready to the hand of this generation; and thrice happy is the generation that to it is given such a work to do. A leading part in the work must be taken by this, the august and powerful legislative body over which I have been called to preside. Most deeply do I appreciate the privilege of my position, for high indeed is the honor of presiding over the American Senate at the beginning of the twentieth century.

The Secretary will read the proclamation of the President convening the Senate in extraordinary session.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

My Fellow-Citizens: When we assembled here on the 4th of March, 1897, there was great anxiety with regard to our currency and credit. None exists now. Then our Treasury receipts were inadequate to meet the current obligations of the Government. Now they are sufficient for all public needs, and we have a surplus instead of a deficit. Then I felt constrained to convene the Coninstead of a deficit. Then I felt constrained to convene the Congress in extraordinary session to devise revenues to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government. Now I have the satisfaction to announce that the Congress just closed has reduced taxation in the sum of forty-one millions of dollars. Then there was deep solicitude because of the long depression in our manufacturing, mining, agricultural, and mercantile industries and the consequent distress of our laboring population. Now every avenue of production is crowded with activity, labor is well employed, and American products find good markets at home and abroad. Our diversified productions, however, are increasing in such unprecedented volume as to admonish us of the necessity of still precedented volume as to admonish us of the necessity of still further enlarging our foreign markets by broader commercial relations. For this purpose reciprocal trade arrangements with other nations should in liberal spirit be carefully cultivated and

The national verdict of 1896 has for the most part been executed. Whatever remains unfulfilled is a continuing obligation resting with undiminished force upon the Executive and the Congress. But fortunate as our condition is, its permanence can only be assured by sound business methods and strict economy in national administration and legislation. We should not permit our great prosperity to lead us to reckless ventures in business or profligacy in public expenditures. While the Congress determines the objects and the sum of appropriations, the officials of the Executive Departments are responsible for honest and faithful disbursement, and it should be their constant care to avoid waste and extravagance. and extravagance.

Honesty, capacity, and industry are nowhere more indispensable than in public employment. These should be fundamental requisites to original appointment and the surest guaranties against removal.

Four years ago we stood on the brink of war without the people knowing it and without any preparation or effort at preparation for the impending peril. I did all that in honor could be done to avert the war, but without avail. It became inevitable; and the Congress at its first regular session, without party division, provided money in anticipation of the crisis and in preparation to meet it. It came. The result was signally favorable to American meet it. It came. The result was signally lavorable to American arms and in the highest degree honorable to the Government. It imposed upon us obligations from which we can not escape and from which it would be dishonorable to seek to escape. We are now at peace with the world, and it is my fervent prayer that if differences arise between us and other powers they may be settled by peaceful arbitration and that hereafter we may be spared the

Entrusted by the people for a second time with the office of President, I enter upon its administration appreciating the great responsibilities which attach to this renewed honor and commisresponsionities which attach to this renewed honor and commission, promising unreserved devotion on my part to their faithful discharge and reverently invoking for my guidance the direction and favor of Almighty God. I should shrink from the duties this day assumed if I did not feel that in their performance I should have the cooperation of the wise and patriotic men of all parties. It encourages me for the great task which I now undertake to believe that these who voluntarily committed to me the trust imlieve that those who voluntarily committed to me the trust imposed upon the Chief Executive of the Republic will give to me generous support in my duties to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States" and to "care that the laws be faithfully executed." The national purpose is indicated through a national election. It is the constitutional method of ascertaining the public will. When once it is registered it is a law to us all, and faithful observance should follow its decrees.

Strong hearts and helpful hands are needed, and, fortunately, Strong hearts and helpful hands are needed, and, fortunately, we have them in every part of our beloved country. We are reunited. Sectionalism has disappeared. Division on public questions can no longer be traced by the war maps of 1861. These old differences less and less disturb the judgment. Existing problems demand the thought and quicken the conscience of the country, and the responsibility for their presence as well as for their righteous settlement rests upon us all—no more upon me than upon you. There are some national questions in the solution of which patriotism should exclude partisanship. Magnifying their difficulties will not take them off our hands nor facilitate their adjustment. Distrust of the capacity, integrity, and high purposes of the American people will not be an inspiring theme for future political contests. Dark pictures and gloomy forebodings are worse than useless. These only becloud, they do not help to point, the way of safety and honor. "Hope maketh not ashamed." The prophets of evil were not the builders of the Republic, nor in its crises since have they saved or served it. The faith of the fathers was a mighty force in its creation, and the faith of their descendants has wrought its progress and furnished its defenders. They are obstructionists who despair and who would destroy confidence in the ability of our people to solve wisely and for civilization the mighty problems resting upon them. The American people, intrenched in freedom at home, take their love for it with There are some national questions in the solution of fidence in the ability of our people to solve wisely and for civilization the mighty problems resting upon them. The American people, intrenched in freedom at home, take their love for it with them wherever they go, and they reject as mistaken and unworthy the doctrine that we lose our own liberties by securing the enduring foundations of liberty to others. Our institutions will not deteriorate by extension, and our sense of justice will not abate under tropic suns in distant seas. As heretofore, so hereafter will the nation demonstrate its fitness to administer any new estate which events devolve upon it, and in the fear of God will "take occasion by the hand and make the bounds of freedom wider yet." If there are those among us who would make our way more difficult, we are those among us who would make our way more difficult, we must not be disheartened, but the more earnestly dedicate our our fathers found them so. We find them so. They are inconvenient. They cost us something. But are we not made better for the effort and sacrifice, and are not those we serve lifted up and blessed?

We will be consoled, too, with the fact that opposition has confronted every onward movement of the Republic from its opening hour until now, but without success. The Republic has marched on and on, and its every step has exalted freedom and humanity. We are undergoing the same ordeal as did our predecessors nearly a century ago. We are following the course they blazed. They triumphed. Will their successors falter and plead organic importance in the patient? Surely after one hundred and blazed. They triumphed. Will their successors ratter and plead organic impotency in the nation? Surely after one hundred and twenty-five years of achievement for mankind we will not now surrender our equality with other powers on matters fundamental and essential to nationality. With no such purpose was the nation created. In no such spirit has it developed its full and independent sovereignty. We adhere to the principle of equality among ourselves, and by no act of ours will we assign to ourselves a subordinate rank in the family of nations ourselves a subordinate rank in the family of nations.

My fellow-citizens, the public events of the past four years have gone into history. They are too near to justify recital. Some of them were unforeseen; many of them momentous and far-reaching in their consequences to ourselves and our relations with the rest of the world. The part which the United States bore so honorably in the thrilling scenes in China, while new to American life, has been in harmony with its true spirit and best traditions, and in dealing with the results its policy will be that of moderation

we face at this moment a most important question—that of the future relations of the United States and Cuba. With our near neighbors we must remain close friends. The declaration of the purposes of this Government in the resolution of April 20, 1898, must be made good. Ever since the evacuation of the island by the army of Spain the Executive with all practicable speed has been assisting its people in the successive steps necessary to the establishment of a free and independent government prepared to assume and perform the obligations of international law which now rest upon the United States under the Treaty of Paris. convention elected by the people to frame a constitution is approaching the completion of its labors. The transfer of Ameriproaching the completion of its labors. The transfer of American control to the new government is of such great importance, involving an obligation resulting from our intervention and the Treaty of Peace, that I am glad to be advised by the recent act of Congress of the policy which the legislative branch of the Government deems essential to the best interests of Cuba and the United States. The principles which led to our intervention require that the fundamental law upon which the new government rests should be adapted to secure a government capable of per-forming the duties and discharging the functions of a separate nation, of observing its international obligations of protecting life and property, insuring order, safety, and liberty, and conforming to the established and historical policy of the United States in its relation to Cuba.

ing to the established and historical policy of the United States in its relation to Cuba.

The peace which we are pledged to leave to the Cuban people must carry with it the guaranties of permanence. We became sponsors for the pacification of the island, and we remain accountable to the Cubans, no less than to our own country and people, for the reconstruction of Cuba as a free commonwealth on abiding foundations of right, justice, liberty, and assured order. Our enfranchisement of the people will not be completed until free Cuba shall "be a reality, not a name; a perfect entity, not a hasty experiment bearing within itself the elements of failure."

While the Treaty of Peace with Spain was ratified on the 6th of February, 1899, and ratifications were exchanged nearly two years ago, the Congress has indicated no form of government for the Philippine Islands. It has, however, provided an army to enable the Executive to suppress insurrection, restore peace, give security to the inhabitants, and establish the authority of the United States throughout the archipelago. It has authorized the organization of native troops as auxiliary to the regular force. It has been advised from time to time of the acts of the military and naval officers in the islands, of my action in appointing civil commissions, of the instructions with which they were charged, of their duties and powers, of their recommendations, and of their several acts under Executive commission, together with the very complete general information they have submitted. These reports missions, of the instructions with which they were charged, of their duties and powers, of their recommendations, and of their several acts under Executive commission, together with the very complete general information they have submitted. These reports fully set forth the conditions, past and present, in the islands, and the instructions clearly show the principles which will guide the Executive until the Congress shall, as it is required to do by the treaty, determine "the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants." The Congress having added the sanction of its authority to the powers already possessed and exercised by the Executive under the Constitution, thereby leaving with the Executive the responsibility for the government of the Philippines, I shall continue the efforts already begun until order shall be restored throughout the islands, and as fast as conditions permit will establish local governments, in the formation of which the full cooperation of the people has been already invited, and when established will encourage the people to administer them. The settled purpose, long ago proclaimed, to afford the inhabitants of the islands self-government as fast as they were ready for it will be pursued with earnestness and fidelity. Already something has been accomplished in this direction. The Government's representatives, civil and military, are doing faithful and noble work in their mission of emancipation and merit the approval and support of their countrymen. The most liberal terms of amnesty have already been communicated to the insurgents, and the way is still open for those who have raised their arms against the Government for honorable submission to its authority. Our countryready been communicated to the insurgents, and the way is still open for those who have raised their arms against the Government for honorable submission to its authority. Our countrymen should not be deceived. We are not waging war against the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. A portion of them are making war against the United States. By far the greater part of the inhabitants recognize American sovereignty and welcome it as a guaranty of order and of security for life, property, liberty, freedom of conscience, and the pursuit of happiness. To them full protection will be given. They shall not be abandoned. We will not leave the destiny of the loyal millions in the islands to the disloyal thousands who are in rebellion against the United States. Order under civil institutions will come as soon as those who now break the peace shall keep it. Force will not be needed or used when those who make war against us shall make it no more. May it end without further bloodshed, and there be ushered in the reign of peace to be made permanent by a government of liberty reign of peace to be made permanent by a government of liberty under law!

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m., and the Vice-President resumed the chair.

RELL as the committee.

PROPOSED LIMITATION OF DEBATE,

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, if it is in order, I wish to give notice of an amendment which I will propose tomorrow to the rules of the Senate.

I desire to say with reference to it that in the Fifty-first Congress I proposed an amendment to the rules looking to a limitation of debate. The amendment which I shall now propose is not the amendment which I proposed then, but one which was proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], and which upon examination I think is better than the one I at that time proposed. I wished to make this statement in order that it might not be supposed that this amendment is original with me.

I ask that the amendment which will be proposed may be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. And printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And printed, and lie over until to-morrow

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment to the rules.

The Secretary read as follows:

Notice of amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Platt of Connecticut to the rules of the Senate.

to the rules of the Senate.

Resolved, That for the remainder of this session the rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto the following:

"When any bill, resolution, or other question shall have been under consideration for a reasonable time it shall be in order for any Senator to demand that debate thereon be closed. On such demand no debate shall be in order, and pending such demand no other motion except one motion to adjourn shall be made. If such demand be seconded by a majority of the Senators present, the question shall forthwith be taken thereon without debate. If the Senate shall decide to close debate on any bill, resolution, or other question, the measure shall take precedence of all other business whatever, and the question shall be put upon the amendments, if any then pending, and upon the measure in its successive stages, according to the rules of the Senate, but without further debate, except that every Senator who may desire shall be permitted to speak upon the measure, including all amendments, not more than once, and not exceeding thirty minutes.

"After the Senate shall have decided to close debate as herein provided, no motion shall be in order but a motion to adjourn or to take a recess, when such motions shall have been lost or shall have failed of a second, it shall not be in order to renew the same until one Senator shall have spoken upon the pending measure, or one vote upon the same shall have intervened.

"Pending proceedings under the foregoing rule no proceeding in respect of a quorum shall be in order until it shall have appeared on a division or on the taking of the yeas and nays that a quorum is not present and voting. "Pending proceedings under the foregoing rule all questions of order, whether upon appeal or otherwise, shall be decided without debate, and no obstructive or dilatory motion or proceedings of any kind shall be in order. "For the foregoing stated purposes the following rules, namely: VII, VIII, IX, X, XII, XIX, XXII, XXVII, XXVIII, XXXVII, XXXV, and XL are modified."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask leave to modify the proposed amendment before it is printed by striking out the words "for the remainder of this session."

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator propose to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. To-morrow. I can not offer it today. I give notice of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will take notice of it, and it will lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to give notice to the Senator that the reason which may have heretofore existed for such a rule has ceased to exist in the Senate, and I see no reason for its enactment. Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it will arise again, Mr. President

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the resolution may be printed, that Mr. TELLER. I ask that the resolution may be printed, that we may have it before us.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That order has been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has already been done.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to be permitted to make one observation. I have not much pride of authorship in this world, but I gave a very thorough and careful study to this question some year or two ago when there was a reason for such question some year or two ago when there was a reason for such a rule, which may or may not have passed away. I supposed on hearing read the resolution which the Senator has introduced, and which he says was introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island, that it is the one I then prepared and which was the result of a good deal of care and study. It is possible that I may be mistaken. There is an old curse, Pěreant illi qui ante nos nostra dixērunt, and I may be liable to that curse from the Senator from Phode Island. Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I happened at the time the resolu-tion was presented to be chairman of the Committee on Rules. There were several propositions submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Platt], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar], and a large number of other Senators bearing on this question of a change of the rules. The committee took the matter up and considered it very carefully for some time, and the resolution which has now been presented by the Senator from Connecticut was the result of the deliberations of the Committee on Rules. I presented the resolution as the mouthpiece or chairman of that committee, although the Senator from Massachusetts was entitled to his full share of the credit of whatever the Committee on Rules decided to do in that matter.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I simply made reference to the fact that this proposed amendment is in the form submitted in the Fifty-first Congress by the Senator from Rhode Island because I did not want it to be supposed that I was the author of it.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to make only one suggestion. As the matter of the formation of proper rules is very important to the Senate, and as other Senators have had the subject under consideration more or less in years past, I would suggest that if any Senator has a rule prepared for consideration he shall introduce it, so that it may lie on the table, and the Senate be given in that way the benefit of the suggestions when we take up any rule for the consideration of the Senate with a view of adopting it. Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I came into the Chamber but a moment ago. I did not hear the reading of the whole of the new rule that is proposed. I ask, if it please the Senate, that the rule be read again on the table.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I should like to hear it read once more. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the reso-

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, in response to the suggestion of my colleague, I think it is only fair and just to give notice of an amendment to the rules and to call the attention of the Senator who has introduced this proposed rule to some amendments that will be necessary in order that the majority of this body may transact the business of the body, because we all admit that it is the only body in the world which is controlled absolutely by the minority. minority.

The objection to the rule, and the objection which I hope to overcome, is to do away with the words "after a bill has been under discussion for a reasonable time." I suggest to the Senator who introduced it that a time should be fixed by the rules which may be called a reasonable time. The minority have the right to be heard, and a reasonable time should be fixed, at five or ten days before the motion of closure is made or the previous question is ordered.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, while the minority have rights, the very question as to what is a reasonable time could be taken up and discussed here for twelve months. I hope the Senator will at least amend it so that no dilatory motions can be entertained and that the question as to whether they are dilatory motions shall rest with the presiding officer.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

Mr. MASON. Certainly.
Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Illinois misapprehends the rule which has just been read. It provides that the question of a reasonable time shall be determined by the Senate without any debate, and that after the Senate shall have determined that a reasonable time shall be determined that a reasonable time shall be determined that a reasonable time. sonable time has elapsed every Senator will have a right to be heard for thirty minutes,

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, that is one of the dangers of the rule. The majority of the Senate changes its rule on every roll call. What is in order and is not in order is a matter for the Senate that decide of the senate changes its rule on every roll call. ate to decide. On one day we rule out a matter that is entirely germane and sustain a point of order. On the next day we put important legislation on an appropriation bill because the majority of the Senate favor the proposition made. It is not a matter of regular procedure. If the man who is in charge of a bill should rise to-day and say the bill has been under consideration for one day and I move the previous question, or I move that debate shall close, that means that the minority shall have but thirty minutes each in which to discuss their side of the question. The danger is that the pendulum will swing too far the other way

At one end of this Capitol the minority have no rights that the majority are bound to respect. Important measures are fixed and the time for voting is fixed, and thirty minutes are allowed each side for discussion. The pendulum has not started to swing at this end of the Capitol. The majority have no rights that the minority are bound to respect. American shipping and the American cow are buried in the dry rivers and harbors of the country. A majority of the Senators, standing for American shipping and for the American cow and for the river and harbor bill, had no more to say about the passage of those bills than if they had been more to say about the passage of those bills than if they had been members of the legislature of Nebraska or Kansas.

Mr. President, at the opening of this extraordinary session I am simply delighted and pleased that so distinguished and experienced a Senator has undertaken the task to finally put this body in a position wherethe majority can govern. This is a Government of majorities. In the most sacred place, the Supreme Court of the United States, the opinion of the majority of that august tribunal becomes the opinion of the court. It is a country of majorities everywhere except here. Here is a Senate of minorities. We may deceive ourselves at times, owing to Senatorial courtesy. I have stood here anxious to get a vote upon a bill. Some distinguished Senator rises and says that his second cousin on his wife's side is taken suddenly with a toothache, in the southeast corner of Alaska, and it will be necessary for him to ask to have the bill go over until a week from next summer. [Laughter.] Senatorial courtesy demands that it shall go over, and the people who have been hoping and praying for relief by way of legislation have to wait until his wife's cousin on his father's side is relieved from the toothache and the Senator comes back from that sad and important duty of social and family attention to his relatives. Mr. President, at the opening of this extraordinary session I am important duty of social and family attention to his relatives.

We know it. Every Senator knows it. We have talked about it. Finally, at the last session we saw bill after bill that the majority were in favor of simply talked out and talked to death. I have no special or personal grievance. I rather enjoyed the display, for in the four years I have been here it has been a part of my morning exercises to pray for the time to come when the rule would be changed. I give notice to the Senate that I shall ask it to adopt an amendment declaring what shall be a reasonable time that a bill has been made generated.

that a bill has been under consideration.

I want to be understood in the amendment which I shall offer. I do not intend to support a rule that will leave the minority with-I do not intend to support a rule that will leave the minority without a due chance to place itself upon record and enter its protest against proposed legislation or any proposed action of the Senate. I shall submit an amendment which will carry out substantially what are known as the Reed rules in the House of Representatives, with this exception: I intend that the minority shall have abundant opportunity for debate, but I propose that there shall a time come in the providence of God, and before the adjournment of the Senate, when the majority placed here by the people can express the will of the people, and let the majority, who have the responsibility have the pleasure and the duty and the profit at responsibility, have the pleasure and the duty and the profit at least of carrying out the measures they have promised to carry Possibly upon the motion to refer, when that comes up to-morrow, there may be more extended debate; and if the resolution comes back from the committee, in any shape, there will certainly then be an opportunity for the fullest debate.

I do not, therefore, rise for the purpose of replying otherwise than very briefly to what has been said in regard to this matter. Entire silence might indicate acquiescence, and therefore I desire to say for myself—not having had any opportunity of conference with any other Senator, because this has been sprung entirely without premonition—that I utterly disapprove of the proposed amendment, and shall do all that is in my feeble power to prevent any change of the rule whatever.

I think, Mr. President, that the methods pursued in this body are the methods best calculated not only to maintain the dignity of the body, but to secure proper consideration and examination of measures which are essential to the promotion of the best good and for the ascertainment of that which it is best that the American Congress should do can Congress should do.

Mr. President, it has been said with great truth that the House of Representatives does not legislate; that the House of Representatives simply suggests legislation. I probably did not use the proper word when I said "legislate"—they do not deliberate. Legislate, technically speaking, of course they do, because they pass bills in that House, but it is without the consideration of the body; it is without the consideration of the majority of the body, to say nothing of the minority. They simply suggest measures and send them to the Senate in a crude form. We have to do not only the examination which properly belongs to this Chamber, but we have to make the examination that properly belongs to the House of Representatives also. A double duty is laid upon us in that properly that regard.

Mr. President, I have had the honor to be here for six years, and in that time, outside of what was done here yesterday in the closing hours. I have seen but one measure which was abandoned on account of protracted debate. That is certainly a very remarkable statement, but it is true, and I challenge any Senator to show to the contrary.

Mark you, Mr. President, I do not say that there has been but one measure defeated by obstructive tactics, because I say there has been no measure defeated by obstructive tactics.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?
Mr. BACON. With pleasure.
Mr. MASON. Does not the Senator know that almost daily

when we have asked-and I presume the Senator as well as myself has asked-for the consideration of some legislation upon questions which are interesting to our constituents, Senators have risen in the Chamber and said: "Oh, no; this will take time for discussion?"

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will ask me the question, and not make a speech.

Mr. MASON. I am not making a speech. I ask whether that has not been done repeatedly; whether it has not been said over and over again "this will take time for discussion and for long discussion," and the very fact that we can not have the previous question has prevented us from getting a vote upon legislation. Is not that true?

Mr. BACON. If that is the Senator's question, and if he is

Mr. BACON. It that is the Senator's question, and if he is through, I will answer it before I conclude.

Mr. MASON. Very well.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I was saying when I was interrupted by the Senator—and I hope I will not forget his question before I take my seat, and if I do I hope I shall be reminded of it, because I do not propose to be diverted from the line of thought I am now pursuing-I was saying to the Senate that there had never been any measure outside of the one yesterday, in the closing hours, which had been defeated by obstructive tactics; in other words, there has never been a measure where obstructive tactics had gone to such an extent as to defeat a measure. Only once in six years has there been an abandonment of a measure by reason of what was thought to be protracted debate, and that was in the case of the ship-subsidy bill.

The Senator from Illinois asked a question which I propose now to answer. The Senator remarked that the proposition here is not to make arrangements by which a measure can be taken up out of its order, but it is a proposition that when a measure is in order there may be a method by which debate may be cut off and the Senate be brought to an immediate vote. The Senator asked me whether or not it is true that it frequently occurs here that when some measure in which a Senator is interested is called up at his instance, there is objection to proceeding with it upon the ground that it would lead to debate. The Senator certainly knows out, as long as they must be responsible to the people if any mistakes are made.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, this is not the proper time to debate this question at length, and I shall not undertake to do so.

That in all those instances it is under unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills, and therefore in each instance when a bill is called up it is a question of whether or not the Senate, by unanimous consent, will undertake the consideration of that measure. The unanimous consent, when given, generally proceeds upon the supposition that a great many are interested in such measures; and therefore, when a measure is proposed which would lead to any discussion whatever, there is objection. The failure to consider a measure is not owing to the fact that there is the absence of a cloture rule, but to the fact that we are then proceeding out of order by general consent, and that general consent is based upon the supposition that it is for the interest of all to take up and dispose of measures which will not consume time, in order that a number of Senators may have an opportunity to have bills taken up by general consent. That is the class of cases to which the Senator from Illinois has been alluding, and the cloture rule would not help under those circum-

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Senator to say we are now proceeding by general consent out of order, there being nothing before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I so stated in the beginning, but as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] has so frequently proceeded in that way, I will avail myself of his distinguished example to proceed a little further in the same direction by continuing my remarks.

Marks.

As I say—I am reminded of it by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, and possibly I ought to be admonished by it rather than to be misled—this is not the proper time for debate, and I only rose, as what had been said was entirely confined to those who are in favor of this rule, for the purpose, in the beginning, of entering my protest against it.

Mr. President, this is not an ordinary legislative body. We are not here in the capacity of ordinary legislators: the are here in the not here in the capacity of ordinary legislators; we are here in the capacity of a high council. We are more than legislators. We are the representatives of the States. We are here as councilors, gathered around a council board, and, as I heard the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] say a few evenings since, upon a formal occasion, not in this Chamber, that the rule of this body is the rule of courtesy, of forbearance, and of consideration, rather than the rule of technical parliamentary law.

Mr. President, reared, as I was, so far as my previous parliamentary experience is concerned, in a body where technical parliamentary law did obtain, and where it was necessary to obtain, because it was a large body, after a short experience of six years here I am prepared to say that, while parliamentary law is absolutely necessary in a body like the House of Representatives, in a small body like this, a body of trained and seasoned and experienced legislators and counselors, and also the constitutional advisers of the President, the rule to which the senior Senator from Massachusetts, mon the interesting occasion a few evenings ago Massachusetts, upon the interesting occasion a few evenings ago referred to by me-the rule of courtesy and of consideration and of forbearance-is the one which, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, works the best results here. The very fact that it is so seldom the case that the absence of a cloture rule works any hardship to any Senator, or in any manner ultimately defeats the will of the majority, is the highest argument and the best argument that could be advanced against a cloture rule.

The Senator from Illinois talks about the rule of the majority. The Senator certainly knows the fact that this is not a Government designed to be at the absolute, unbridled dominion and power of a majority. We have in our fundamental law numbers of instances where more than a majority is required to accomplish anything. More than a majority is required to expel a member of this body. Is that the rule of the majority? Why should not the majority do that, if we have the rule of the majority do that,

Mr. MASON. May I ask the Senator a question?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?
Mr. BACON. For a question, I do.
Mr. MASON. Is not the rule of the majority intended to be the rule in Congress and in all legislative bodies?
Mr. BACON. I will come to that before I get through, if the Senator desires, but I am answering this other proposition now.
The Senator says this is a Government of majorities. I say it is

The Senator says this is a Government of majorities. I say it is exactly the opposite, and that one main purpose of the Constitution was to put the minority in a position where the majority could not override it. You can not amend the Constitution by a majority.

Mr. MASON. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BACON. No, Mr. President, I will not until I have answered the first question of the Senator, and then I will with pleasure hear him again,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia declines

Mr. MASON. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will not consider me discourmr. BACON. I hope the Senator will not consider me discourmr. BACON. I hope the Senator will not consider me discourmr. BACON.

Mr. BACON. I nope the Senator will not consider me discourteous in recognizing my inability to answer two questions at once.
Mr. MASON. If you will answer one, I will be satisfied.
Mr. BACON. Very well; I will try to do so.
Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I simply rise to a question of order. I have understood the rule of the Senate to be that whenever any Senator rises to interrupt another Senator who has the floor it is first his data to address the Chair. the floor, it is first his duty to address the Chair. I have noticed several interruptions when the Chair was not first addressed, and I insist that the rule of the Senate be observed in that particular.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I was replying to the suggestion of the learned and eloquent junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] that this was a government of the majority, from which he deduced the conclusion that anything which interfered with the unchecked power of the majority was wrong. I say that the genius and spirit of our Government is not a government of majorities, and I was proceeding to give some illustrations. I spoke of the fact that a Senator could not be expelled nor a Member of the House of Representatives by a majority vote in either House. the House of Representatives by a majority vote in either House. It takes more than a majority vote to make a treaty, although it already had the assent of the President. In case the President should fail to concur with Congress as to any bill which has been passed through both Houses, it takes more than a majority to say that that bill shall become a law. As I said before, it takes more than a majority of States, the highest of all power, to work an amendment in the Constitution; and I suppose it is possible for that reason that some shorter cuts are in this day being taken to work amendments in the Constitution practically, if not literally work amendments in the Constitution practically, if not literally and technically.

The Senator from Illinois speaks about the rules of the House of Representatives in connection with the rule of the majority. Why, Mr. President, there never was such a rule of a majority as there is in the House of Representatives. It might be sufficient to say that it was the rule of five men who compose the Committee on Rules, but it is not limited to them; it is the rule of one man out of three hundred and sixty-five. It is a fact that that man can stand there and absolutely thwart and block the wish and the will out of three hundred and sixty-five. It is a fact that that man can stand there and absolutely thwart and block the wish and the will of 365 Representatives of seventy-odd million of people.

I want to warn the Senate in the very beginning of this business, Mr. President, that while they may now propose to go only a part of the way in this cloture business, whenever they have entered on that road they will go, ultimately, the whole way, and we shall have in this, the great Republic, the great representative Government of the world, the spectacle of the Congress, not only of the House of Representatives, but of the Senate, ultimately dominated by one or two men, and coming tamely into the House of Representatives, and as tamely into the Senate Chamber, petitioning men holding no higher commission than any man holds who stands upon the floor—petitioning a man here or a man in the other House that he will graciously permit a measure to be considered or that he will graciously permit a Representative of the people or a Senator from a State to be heard on the floor.

Mr. President, what is the necessity for the passage of such a resolution as is proposed? Inconveniences doubtless result from unlimited debate, but much greater inconveniences will come from the attempt to apply the rules of the other House to this; and I trust never to see the day when Senators, because they happen to be in the majority now, will think it consistent with the dignity of this body, consistent with the consideration which is due to every man who stands here representing a State—I trust the time will never come when Senators who may now be in the majority may find it consistent, in view of these possibilities, to exercise the power they now have to adopt a cloture rule which shall dominate and control and tie and bind and manacle the minority in this Chamber.

shall dominate and control and tie and bind and manacle the minority in this Chamber.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I desire to say but a word concerning this measure, because I understand it is not proper to discuss it upon its merits at this time.

I desire to say that it is a most extraordinary thing that a rule of this kind should be offered in an extraordinary session of the Senate, which has been called by the President of the United States for the purpose of confirming his nominations. It is not proper that any legislation of this kind should be introduced; and possi-bly before I close I shall raise the question as to whether or not it is proper to introduce such a resolution. But before I do that, I desire to say one other word.

Since the Senate has been in existence, there has been here the right of unlimited debate, and I believe it is one of the great bulwarks of our country.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. WELLINGTON. I will allow the Senator from Massa-

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to interfere with what the Senator is about to say, or with the Senator's proceeding; but I desire to give notice that when the committee appointed to notify the President of the assembling of the Senate shall have returned—which will probably be long after the Senator from Maryland gets through—I shall then insist on the regular order, so as not to have this debate proceed indefinitely.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Certainly; and I shall then yield with pleasure to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I do not make that suggestion now, but shall do so when the committee shall have reported.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I wish to say, Mr. President, that this proposed rule, in my opinion, has been introduced as a matter of revenge, because in the closing hours of the last session of Congress certain Senators of this body, knowing that in the House of Representatives there had been no just or fair discussion of a bill, knowing that there had been sent here a bill that was not fair or just or proper to be passed when their accounts of the proper to be passed when their accounts of the proper to be passed when their accounts of the proper to be passed when their accounts of the passed when the passed when their accounts of the passed when the pa just or proper to be passed, upon their consciences determined that they would oppose that bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland

Mr. WELLINGTON. I yield.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator will allow me, since he is speaking of the motive which prompted the introduction of this amendment to the rules, or the notice that it would be introduced, I wish to say to him that I was not in favor of the passage of the river and harbor bill at the session just closed.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I am delighted to hear that the Senator from Connecticut is not in the conspiracy; but somehow or other, perhaps without his knowledge, he may have been made use of

for this purpose.

I desire to state that yesterday, in the last session of the Senate, I was threatened that unless I desisted from opposing the river and harbor bill, as I had a right to do as a Senator of the United States upon my conscience and my oath, a cloture rule would be applied in the Senate after that session. Oh, Mr. President, it may be well to have revenge, but time has its changes and transformations. I bow to no party and to no man when conscience tells me that a bill is wrong; and I believe it is right, so long as the Senate of the United States exists under present conditions, to use every motive United States exists under present conditions, to use every motive and effort to defeat an iniquitous bill.

I say, Mr. President, I was threatened that, unless I desisted, a cloture rule would be established in the Senate. Very well, establish a cloture rule; and what do you do, Senators, when that is accomplished? The majority of to-day is not the majority of to-morrow; and remember that in the Senate of the United States exists to-day the conservatism and the balance wheel that must preserve republican institutions in this country.

What of the House of Representatives? The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] has well described the condition there. You speak of the House representing the people of the United States. Why, sir, no member of the House of Representatives can be heard in that House unless it be the will and the pleasure of the Speaker, or unless, indeed, he be the head of a great committee. I was a or unless, indeed, he be the head of a great committee. I was a member of that House; I have experienced its rules; I know of conditions there; and if you will bring the Senate of the United States under the same iniquitous rule, then I notify you now and here, I sound the note of warning, that liberty of discussion and deliberation will have passed away from the lawmaking body of the United States. United States.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say at this time.
Mr. MASON. Mr. President, just one word in reply to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Wellington]. The Senator from Maryland seems to indicate that this is a rebellion; and I admit it. It is a rebellion of the majority against the minority. the majority against the minority.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield

to the Senator from Maryland?

to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Have you ever in your life heard of a rebellion of the majority against the minority?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. MASON. There was a point of order made a while ago by the Senator from Maryland, I think it was—I have forgotten the point—but I will be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I only desired to suggest to the Senator from Illinois that is a peculiar rebellion to hear of the majority rebelling against the minority of any body.

Mr. MASON. Well, it is peculiar because it is in a peculiar body. It is the only body in the world where the minority manages the business of the Government against the will of the majority: and business of the Government against the will of the majority; and it is a good, healthy rebellion of the majority against the minority.

We are not disposed to talk about liberty of discussion. It is the license of long talk that we are opposed to. Senators who want to defeat a measure can defeat it in this way. I have seen it done, and I perhaps ought to confess that I have been sometimes guilty of it, because I learned quickly from these old Senators. They do not call it filibustering. They want to discuss a measure, and they will set their mouths going and go off and leave them a week at a time without any intellectual exercise at all.

We are not proposing to apply the Reed rules in the sense of limiting debate and refusing debate. The suggestion which I had the honor of making to the Senator who introduced the proposed rule was that it should give every Senator a chance to debate, but that there must come a time sometime when the majority could vote the will of the body. The Senator from Georgia knows very well that that time never comes so long as any one or two men decide to keep up what we call "Senatorial courtesy" in unlimited debate and license of tongue.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator kindly inform the Senate-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois

Mr. MASON. Yes, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator indicate the particular measures, within the four years the Senator has been here, which failed to come to a vote by reason of debate, other than the shipping bill?
Mr. MASON. Their name is legion.
Mr. BACON. Name some of them. If their name is legion, some of them ought to be easy to find.

Mr. MASON. I will take a little time. In the first place, Mr. President, I have had the pleasure and honor of reporting some pure-food legislation to this body. That proposed pure-food legislation has never had a vote upon any branch of it, except what I was able to get on an amendment to a revenue bill two or three years ago, an amendment which compelled the manufacturers of flour to brand it when they mixed it; and I only got a vote upon that because the Chair held, and was sustained by a majority of the Senate, that it was a revenue measure. Every other time that I have tried to bring a measure into this body and to get a vote, an expression from the Senate, to prevent the sale of adulterated food, to prevent the wholesale putting into the stomachs of the people of this country poisonous articles I am met with the proposition, "Oh, yes; we are all for it. But some gentleman who is engaged in making this kind of stuff has a friend in the Senate who is going to discuss it at great length, and you never can get a vote on it, and we do not want to interfere with the business of the country by having your pure-food legislation injected here." It is by such indirection that important and necessary legislation is often killed. If the bills in the interest of the people could be piled upon that desk that have been defeated by this interminable and everlasting talk, unlimited debate, and licensed tongue, they would reach above the ceiling; and the Senator from Georgia knows that as well as I do.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a ques-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia? Mr. MASON. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. We are discussing now, Mr. President, the question of unlimited debate, and I ask the Senator to name—

Mr. MASON. I was proceeding to name—
Mr. BACON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. MASON. Have I named enough for the Senator?
Mr. BACON. The Senator has named the pure-food bill. The question I desired to ask him was this: Was the pure-food bill to which he alludes ever the regular order of the Senate under debate, and was it defeated by reason of protracted debate upon it?
Mr. MASON. The Senator is begging the question. He knows that we have had no regular order. Since he has been here, six years, we never started upon the Calendar of the Senate. I have been here four years, and the regular order is unanimous consent—unanimous consent of Senators in charge of appropriation sent—unanimous consent of Senators in charge of appropriation bills. Talk about legislation being defeated. How many men of the majority would there be to day in favor of the bill known as the oleomargarine bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MASON. Yes.
Mr. GALLINGER. In the direction indicated by the Senator—and this is only a sample case—I hold in my hand Senate bill No. to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, a 728, to promote the emclency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, a bill that the President pro tempore of the Senate introduced and was greatly interested in. It was introduced into this body December 6, 1899. It was reported without amendment from the Committee on Commerce, of which the present President pro tempore is chairman, January 11, 1900. I placed the bill in my desk long before the close of the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, intending to ask consideration for it. I had notice served upon me by two members of this body that the bill could not pass the Senate, that they would not permit it to pass the Senate.

the Senate, that they would not permit it to pass the Senate.

While I have had a little legislative experience, I accepted that notice, and the bill has been allowed to remain in my desk for the reason that I knew if I called it up and got a majority vote of the Senate, it would not be permitted to receive a final vote in this body. This is only a sample of hundreds of other cases, and the Senator from Illinois is very properly calling attention to that class of legislation.

Mr. WELLINGTON. May I interrupt the Senator from

Mr. MASON. I yield.
Mr. WELLINGTON. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. Mr. WELLINGTON. Would it not have been proper for him, after asking the consideration of the matter by unanimous consent, to have moved in this body the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; and I was—
Mr. WELLINGTON. One moment. When he did that, then the majority of the Senate would decide whether or not they would proceed to its consideration.

Mr. MASON. A majority can do that, but a majority can not say whether they will vote on it or not. It is very easy to consider a measure, but not to secure a vote on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer the Senator from Maryland.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.
Mr. GALLINGER. I have a little comprehension of the rules of this body, and need not be told—
Mr. WELLINGTON. I am sure the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me to say to him that I know he comprehends the rules of this body. I know he knows much more of them than I do, and I would at any time bow to his opinion upon a parliamentary question.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very kind of the Senator. I simply wanted to say that I fully understood my privileges, so far as concerns moving to take up the bill, and I had assurances from both sides of the Chamber that I would get a very large major the behavior of the had a property that I was not rash enough of the body when I made the motion; but I was not rash enough to do that in the face of the fact that there was opposition here that would have absolutely prevented a final vote on the bill during the last session of Congress. I perfectly understood that.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a question of order. He will state it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator says there is no regular order in the Senate. I call for it now.

Senate. I call for it now. The VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. TELLER. What is it?
Mr. HOAR. Morning business.
Mr. MONEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. MASON. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist on it for just one minute. If there is any business to be done

Mr. Allison and Mr. Cockrell entered the Chamber.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the report of the committee appointed to notify the President.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the committee appointed to inform the President that a quorum of the Senate was present and ready to receive any message he desired to communicate have performed that duty, and in response thereto the President an-nounced to us that he would immediately send a communication in writing to the Senate.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the question is put upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, will he indulge me for a moment?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.
Mr. MORGAN. I offer a resolution which I ask to have read and lie over until tomorrow.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama submits a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolution declaring the Clayton-Bulwer treaty abrogated.

Resolved by the Senate, That the treaty known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty between Great Britain and the United States, which was concluded on the 19th day of April, 1850, is abrogated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule, and be printed.

PROPOSED LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, if there is nothing else in the order of business preliminary to this matter, I desire at this time to submit the amendment to the rules of which I gave notice yesterday, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolu-

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended by Lake following:

"When any bill, resolution, or other question shall have been under consideration for a reasonable time it shall be in order for any Senator to demand that debate thereon be closed. On such demand no debate shall be in order, and pending such demand no other motion except one motion to adjourn shall be made. If such demand be seconded by a majority of the Senators present, the question shall forthwith be taken thereon without debate. If the Senate shall decide to close debate on any bill, resolution, or other question, the measure shall take precedence of all other business whatever, and the question shall be put upon the amendments, if any then pending, and upon the measure in its successive stages according to the rules of the Senate, but without further debate, except that every Senator who may desire shall be permitted to speak upon the measure, including all amendments, not more than once, and not exceeding thirty minutes.

"After the Senate shall have decided to close debate as herein provided, no motion shall be in order but a motion to adjourn or to take a recess, when such motions shall have been lost or shall have failed of a second, it shall not be in order to renew the same until one Senator shall have spoken upon the pending measure or one vote upon the same shall have intervened.

"Pending proceedings under the foregoing rule no proceeding in respect of a quorum shall be in order until it shall have appeared on a division or on the taking of the yeas and nays that a quorum is not present and voting.

"Pending proceedings under the foregoing rule all questions of order, whether upon appeal or otherwise, shall be decided without debate, and no obstructive or dilatory motion or proceedings of any kind shall be in order.

"For the foregoing stated purposes the following rules, namely, VII, VIII, IX, X, XII, XXXII, XXXII, XXVII, XXXVII, XXXVI, and XL are modified."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TELLER. Before it is referred, I wish to make an inquiry. I suppose the proper person to make it of is the Senator who introduced the resolution. I ask whether he expects action on that resolution at this special session?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I have not desired to discuss the resolution at this time, and I doubt very much whether the Committee on Rules will be able to consider the proposed amendment, so that it can be acted upon at this session. I had not supposed that it would be. I had felt that we ought to change our rules, and I had felt that a proper time to introduce the amendment would be at the commencement of a new session of the Senate, and accordingly I introduced it.

the amendment would be at the commencement of a new session of the Senate, and accordingly I introduced it.

I should be glad if it could be acted upon at this session, but I do not suppose that it can. I desire that it shall go to the Committee on Rules, that they may have an opportunity to consider it now and during the recess, in the hope that some fair measure may be devised by which there can be a reasonable, not an unreasonable, limit to debate. I felt that if the committee were not able to come to a conclusion at this session there might be opportunity for them to consider it during the recess.

able to come to a conclusion at this session there might be opportunity for them to consider it during the recess.

Mr. TELLER. I did not desire to object to its going to the Committee on Rules; I think that is the proper place for it to go; but for the convenience of myself and other Senators, who I know hope to get away in a few days, I wanted to learn whether it was to be pressed or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules, if there is no objection.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask one other question of some one connected with the party in the control of the Senate, and that is whether it is expected that we shall do anything more than executive business.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not claim to speak for anyone but myself in answer to the Senator from Colorado, but the session that is called is purely executive. There can be no legislative functions performed by the body alone. The other House is not in session; Congress is not in session; the other House has not organized; and for one I do not suppose that we will either be kept here many days or be called upon to consider any subject-matter that is not purely executive.

Mr. TELLER. In 1893, at a special session of the Senate of this character, there was an extensive discussion as to the right of the Senate to proceed to legislative business, if it saw fit. 1t was dis-Senate to proceed to legislative business, if it saw fit. It was discussed quite extensively, and there was prepared by one of the officers of the Senate a complete history of what had been the attitude of the Senate at different sessions of this kind. While it was a controverted question whether we could legislate or not, very many Senators believing that we could, it was the general opinion that we ought not, and we resolved then not to legislate.

I do not want to delay the Senate this morning from going into executive session, but I will ask leave to put in the RECORD the precedents which were cited in 1893. I ask that the matter may be printed in the RECORD for the convenience of the Senate.

printed in the Record for the convenience of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks that the matter he has indicated may be printed in the Record. Is there objection? There being none, it is so ordered.

March 13, 1893, pp. 11-15.]

Mr. Gorman. * * * Mr. President, I have caused to be made an exhaustive examination of the precedents of the Senate in called executive sessions, and can not find a single instance, prior to the present session, in which a bill, a joint resolution, or any matter requiring the concurrent action of the House of Representatives has ever been presented or received, with the single exception of a concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] in April, 1881, in relation to "Isthmus ship canals," which was objected to by Mr. Dawes of Massachusetts on the ground that it required the concurrence of the House of Representatives; whereupon, after debate, the Senator from Alabama modified the resolution so as to make it a simple Senate resolution, when it was received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I find in the early history of the Senate that many of the presiding officers held that no business of any character at called executive sessions similar to this could be received or acted upon in open session. Among others who took this view was Mr. William R. King, a most accomplished parliamentarian, who was President of the Senate in 182.

"Mr. Bayard of Delaware raised the point of order that the resolution. 'if not legislative in its character, is equivalent to legislation. It is intended to have legislative effect, and is not, therefore, consonant to the object of this special session of the Senate.'

"He took the ground that the special session was called by the President of the United States as 'an executive session for the purpose of considering such nominations as he (the President) might see fit to lay before it, and for the performance of its constitutional duty in relation to such treaties as he might propose for its concurrence.

"He also held that no other matters could be considered at such a called session except the question of the membership of the body.

"March 23, 1875, Congressional Record, page 147, Mr. Bayard said: 'The Senate of the United States is but one portion of the legislative branch of the Government. By itself it has no legislative power whatever; and only in conjunction with the other House of Congress and the action of the President of the United States can it have legislative power at all.'

"Mr. Saulsbury of Delaware said: 'We are now convened in extraordinary session, and certain it is that in our capacity as a Senate, convened under the proclamation of the President of the United States, we do not possess the powers which we ordinarily possess when we meet as a legislative body. Our power of legislation is entirely gone. We can only perform the functions pertaining to our character as an executive council. We may deal with questions affecting the constitution of this body. * * * but we may not deal directly or indirectly. in my judgment, with questions which do not pertain either to the constitution of this body itself or to the questions with which it has to deal in its character as an executive council.' (Ibid., p. 30.)

"Similar views were expressed by other leading Senators on both sides of the Chamber.

"At the called session of the Senate March 5.1881, Congress to the Chamber.

"At the called session of the Senate March 5.1881, Congress to the Council of the Senate petitions for legislation could not be received.

"April 6, 1881, page 211, same volume of Record, the Vice-President ruled that petitions could not be received "except by unanimous consent, as the rule in reference to the morning hour does not apply to an executive session of the Senate."

"At the same session, March 23, 1881, Mr. Voorhees of Indiana offered a resolution concerning the attitude of national banks toward the refunding of the national debt.

"Mr. Morrill of Vermont objected to its reception as being out of order, this being an executive session and the resolution clearly pointing to legislative business."

"Mr. Ferry of Michigan (who had been President pro tempore of the Senate took the ground that the Senate was called in executive session and could not consider legislative business, whereupon—

"Mr. Voorhees obtained permission of the Senate to make a statement concerning the precedents of the Senate as to its action at such called executive sessions. The speech, which wild be found in the CONGRESSIONAL Record, volume 12. Forty-seventh Congress, special session of the Senate, pages 37-40, contains all the precedents from 1825 to that date; but there is not a single instance cited of a bill, joint resolution, or other subject requiring the concurrent action of the House of Representatives having ever been presented or received, the whole current of the precedents being that the Senate can do, when the House is not in session, only such business as does not require the concurrence of the other body.

"April 1, 1881 (same volume, p. 154), Mr. Lamar of Mississippi said: "We are here as pa

"Mr. Bayard of Delaware, April 6, 1881 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 214), said:

"In the absence of the other House of Congress, no such thing as practical legislation can be begun here, because it can not be considered by the House of Representatives at the same session of the same Congress."

"April 27, 1881, Mr. Morgan of Alabama submitted a concurrent resolution in relation to 'isthmus ship canals,' which was objected to by Mr. Dawes of Massachusetts, on the ground that it required the concurrence of the House of Representatives; whereupon, after debate. Mr. Morgan modified the resolution so as to make it a simple Senate resolution, when it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

"After the death of President Garfield in 1881 and the accession of Vice-President Arthur to the Presidency, there having been no President protempore of the Senate elected at the preceding session, and there being imminent danger, as the law relating to the Presidential succession then stood, that the Government would be left without a head in the event of the death of the then President, a special executive session was called by President Arthur, which assembled October 10, 1881.

"At that session Mr. Garland, of Arkansas, afterwards Attorney-General, said: 'It is very evident that we can not do any legislative business.' (CongressionAl Record). We can only perform executive business.' (CongressionAl Record). At the extraordinary session of the Senate convened by the proclamation of President Cleveland, March 4, 1889, on a resculption submitted the Arthur, and the proclamation of President Cleveland. March 4, 1889, on a resculption submitted the Arthur and President Cleveland. March 4, 1889, on a resculption submitted the Arthur and President Cleveland. March 4, 1889, on a resculption submitted the constant and proclamation of President Cleveland.

At the extraordinary session of the Senate convened by the proclamation of President Cleveland, March 4, 1882, on a resolution submitted by Mr. Call of Florida, for the appointment of a special committee to investigate and report on the relations of the United States with the island of Cuba and the other West Indies, a very interesting debate occurred as to the power of the Senate to act upon such a resolution at a called session of the Senate alone; from which I quote the following from the Congressional Record, volume 21, part 1, special session of the Senate:

"Mr. Gray of Delaware said:

"Mr. President, if from the resolution as reported at the desk we are to understand the scope of this proposition of the Senator from Florida, it is that a committee shall be now constituted which shall proceed to consider matters of public interest with a view to legislative action; and the resolution goes on to authorize this committee to make its investigations and to report to the Senate. I do not understand that this body, convened as it is in extraordinary session, is clothed with any legislative function whatever, and I think it is exceedingly important that we should maintain the distinction between this executive session and the ordinary legislative session in which we are one branch of the lawmaking or legislative power of the Federal Government.

"There is no possible action that could be taken by the Senate on a report made by this proposed committee that would not in my opinion be legislative action. If the Senator from Florida has the idea and maintains that this proposition of his looks merely to performing some executive function, of course that puts it upon a different ground from the one on which I object to the resolution; but I can not understand, as I heard the resolution read, that anything can come as the ultimate result of the investigation proposed by this committee except action on the part of the Senate, and that action must be legislative action in connection with the other branch of Congress. If that be so, it comes clearly within the scope of the objection that I made. I think we should be very careful to confine ourselves within our just powers and not proceed to business which it is not competent for the Senate to transact at this extraordinary session. (Page 23.)
"Mr. Sherman of Ohio said:

and not proceed to business which it is not competent for the Senate to transact at this extraordinary session. (Page 23.)

"Mr. Sherman of Ohio said:

"Everything that can be done by the Senate at any time can be done by the Senate when assembled in extraordinary session. It is true we can not pass a bill so as to make it a law, but we might consider a bill, we might inquire into a bill, we might pass resolutions. We can not make a charge on the public Treasury, because that requires the assent of both Houses; but we can express our opinions and do anything that the Senate of the United States may lawfully and rightfully do. We might pass a bill, so far as we are concerned, but it would seem to be idle work, the other House not being in session to actupon it.

"But here is the point, and all the precedents referred to turn on this. That in every case the Senate has by its vote and by its rule limited its action. For instance, in July, 18d, when both Houses were convened in extraordinary session, one of the first acts done by the two Houses was to declare that no measure should be adopted or introduced except that which related to the subject-matter, that was the rebellion then existing in the United States. So eight years ago a similar, not rule, but practice was adopted. Objection was made to the introduction of resolutions and also to the introduction of bills, but petitions were presented.

"So in 1873 petitions were presented.

"So in 1873 petitions and resolutions were presented and the point of order was made, not as to the right to introduce those resolutions, but as to whether it was expedient or wise, having been convened in extraordinary session, for the Senate to consider or even to introduce resolutions, but as to whether it was expedient or wise, having been convened in extraordinary session, for the Senate to consider or even to introduce resolutions, but as to whether it was expedient or wise, having been convened in extraordinary session, for the Senate wis open and might receive those petition it could transact in a regular session.

"I think it is true that we have not passed bills at these called sessions, but very many resolutions which are entirely outside of executive matters and entirely outside of matters relating to treaties have been passed at almost every special session of the Senate. (Pages 23 and 24.)

"Mr. Gray again said:

"Mr. President, the Senate of the United States convened in extraordinary session, as the Senate is now convened, in the absence of the other House, undoubtedly has in one sense the power to do anything that it is its will to do. I do not dispute that. There is no text of the Constitution that forbids it doing anything, taking any order of proceeding, making any investigation that it may by its vote determine upon. This is not a question of order, properly so called, but it is a question of propriety. The question to be considered is of the competence of the Senate, to be determined by a consideration of the legislative power as conferred by the Constitution, taking into account the scheme of our Government and the appropriate depositaries of its various powers. It is a matter which ought to be carefully and gravely considered by the Senate before it commits itself to a precedent which, as seems to me, is so unwarranted as the one proposed by the unmodified resolution of the Senator from Florida.

"It is true this question has been before the Senate heretofore. It is not remarkable that it should often have been, as it has been, decided in various ways. In 1873, on the reception of a petition looking to matters of general concern presented to the Senate at one of its extraordinary sessions called by the President in the same manner and for the same purpose as this has been called, the question was debated at some length, and I find here an expression of opinion from Senators on both sides, Senators whose opinions are entitled to the greatest respect, in regard to this question of propriety and competency on that matter of the reception of general petitions and having alone, at an extra session, should enter upon business which belongs to the Congress of the United States. The Senate, of course, could receive petitions proper to do it. The ruling was that made yesterday, as I understood it then and understand it now, is following the precedents that have been determined by the Senate where the objection was made."

"In that same debate the Senator from Ohio, the present senior Senator from that State [Mr. Sherman] said. Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] seeks to establish a precedent. I satumit to him whether on the whole, if we are to do that, it is not better for us to establish the precedent that the Senate shall not undertake to do what it can not do. The Senate is always disposed to exercise all the power it possesses, and sometimes we go a little beyond the line. Senate is not better for us to establish the precedent that the Senate shall not undertake to do what it can not do. The Senate is a result to the senate shall not undertake to do what it is not better for us to establish the precedent that the Senate shall no undertake to do what it has not the right to do. The Senate has no power at this session to do anything of a legislative character. All legislative power is conferred upon Congress, and both Houses must be in session at the same time or legislation can not be done; and then the Constants has no power at this session to do anything of a legislative character. All legislative business, it is the business of Congress, not the business of the Senate alone, to the season of the munications have been received at previous sessions, simply for the purpose of placing them on the files of the Senate, and not for the action of the Senate.

"Mr. Fessenden. Very well, sir; I take no appeal.

"The VICE-PRESIDENT. This communication, therefore, will be placed on the files of the Senate."

"I will not weary the Senate with reading further from the discussion of this point, which was carried on at great length; but it seems to me that every objection made by the Senator from Ohio to the reception and reference of those petitions in 1873 lies to the adoption of this resolution. Those petitions could undoubtedly have been received by the Senate and could have been referred; that is, the Senate had the power to do it. There was no constitutional inhibition in the text of the Constitution which forbade their doing it, nor is there any that forbids the Senate entertaining this resolution; but, as I said before, as a matter of propriety, as a matter of competency on the part of the Senate, inasmuch as this resolution looks to legislation, looks to some action which makes necessary the presence of the other branch of Congress, it seems to me that we should not undertake the first step toward considering it when we are not present in Congress assembled, but merely convened in extraordinary session as a Senate alone, and as such vested with no legislative power whatever.

"Mr. Sherman. Mr. President, I do not find fault with anything that I said in 1873; it is exactly in accordance with my position now; but the question as to whether we should enter upon these matters of legislation was then a question of propriety. I am of the same opinion now, that we ought not to enter upon anything that we can not complete as a Senate; but even them, in 1873, although petitions were ruled out because they were addressed to both Houses of Congress, by a vote of nearly two to one on two separate occasions petitions were excluded because they were purely legislative in their character, resolutions of various kinds were a distinction was made in 1873 that is palpable to the eye of everyone between legislative proceedings and mere resolutions of inquiry to get information in regard to legislative matters or in regard to executive business. For instance, on the very date from which the Senator reads, I find a resolution introduced by the then Senator from Michigan—

"Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

"Mr. Ghax. From what page is the Senator reading?

"Mr. Sherman. From what page is the Senator reading?

"Mr. Chandler. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

"Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be authorized and directed to sit during the recess, and to investigate and report upon the subject of subsidies to steamship lines, and what lines, if any, should be subsidized; also, upon the propriety of paying bounties to shipbuilders, etc."

"Instituting an inquiry into the whole subject of subsidies to steamship lines, and that was objected to because it had not been printed, and it was ordered to be printed and laid over one day, and it was taken up subsequently and considered. So the Senate at the very time when this debate occurred, while they reduced to receive petitions and enter upon the consideration of petitions, did receive resolutions.

"Mr. Grant. The Senator from Ohio will allow me to say that that resolution and a great many others, I believe, of the same character as the one proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Call] have been adopted by the Senate, and they have generally been adopted by unanimous consent, as the Senator from Ohio, if he will pardon me, on page 7s of the volume before me, said in relation to just that point:

"Mr. Sherman. It was done by unanimous consent without objection. By that kind of logic I can show that there are no rules in the Senate at all, because every rule in the Senate has been violated. There is no rule on the whole list but what has been waived over and over again by unanimous consent. Unless the point was made, I insist that a precedent was not established by the Senate, because every rule has been violated. There is no rule on the whole list but what has been waived over and over again by unanimous consent; but that does not establish what the rule is."

"Mr. Sherman. The Senate can do what it has a right to do, by unanimous consent; but that does not establish what the rule is."

"Mr. Sherman has been waived over and

again:

"All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress'—

"Not in a Senate, not in a House of Representatives, but 'in a Congress.'

Reading all of that section of the Constitution, we find what a Congress is:

"All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representathe United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

There is no Congress and can be no Congress under the Constitution unless there be a Senate and House of Representatives.

"Mr. Platt. May I ask the Senator a question?

"Mr. George. Not now. There must be both a Senate and a House of Representatives, and in order to constitute that Congress, that Senate and that House of Representatives must be organized according to the Constitution, and must be assembled, both of them, at a time and place prescribed by law. Unless there is such an assemblage of both Houses, both of a Senate and of a House of Representatives, at a time and place prescribed by law, there is no body in existence entitled to be called 'a Congress,' in which, by that clause of the Constitution which I have just read, all legislative power is vested.

and of a House of Representatives, at a time and place presented by away, there is no body in existence entitled to be called 'a Congress,' in which, by that clause of the Constitution which I have just read, all legislative power is vested.

"Congress' itself in its literal meaning simply means an assemblage, a coming together, a coming together of the representatives of the States and of the people, and it is inaccurate and unconstitutional language to apply the term' Congress' to any individuals, though they be Senators or Representatives, unless they be organized and assembled as a Congress in pursuance of law. The assembling of the Senate in extraordinary session by proclamation of the President is not an assemblage of Congress. It is not a Congress, and therefore is not a body in which the Constitution vests legislative power. It is not in that condition even a part of Congress. It is the assemblage of a body which may, under certain circumstances and in accordance with law and when the other body is assembled also, become then, and not till then, a part of the Congress of the United States.

"To show that is correct I have but to call the attention of Senators to the formula prefixed to every bill and to every joint resolution ever passed by the Congress, which is in these words:

"Beit enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled."

"That formula was adopted at the very first session of Congress held under the Constitution, and it has been adhered to from that time to this. That formula expresses this idea that there must be an assembly in Congress of both the Senate and the House of Representatives before that constitutional body is formed in which legislative power is vested by the Constitution.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Of course no Senator can speak for anyone but himself; but for myself, I should not think it wise to attempt to proceed at this executive session of the Senate to consider legislative business. I was one of the Senators who in 1893, if that was the date——

Mr. TELLER. That was the time—— Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Felt that the Senate had a right to do so. But I do not think there is any necessity for it, or that it would be wise to do so at this session.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, while I quite agree with the view expressed that we ought not to enter upon legislation in the ordinary sense, yet it appears to me that there are some matters we can do, and as an illustration I submit a Senate resolution which leads to be seen as Senate compatible with a certain data. which looks to charging a Senate committee with a certain duty, which I trust will not be opposed. I ask that the resolution be read and that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire, before that order is taken, to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate to the rules of the Senate. The rules of the Senate prescribe to the Chair a certain order of business in the morning hour, and there is no exception in those rules in reference to an executive session or an extraordinary session. This is not an executive session of the Senate, it is not an executive session of the Senate. It is an extraordinary session, when the Senate is called, under the Constitution, by the President to discharge such duties as they see fit to discharge and as he may see fit to lay before them. The rules of the Senate apply in full force to this extraordinary session, and it is my opinion—I do not know how many concur in it—that the order of business is to be pursued in this session precisely as in any regular session of Congress, and that no one has the right to set aside these rules until it has been done in an orderly way and we make them apply only to regular sessions of Congress instead of an extraordinary session of the Senate.

Under that rule, Mr. President, the first order of business, of course, is reading the Journal. Then the call for petitions and memorials. I presume that this extraordinary session of the Senate would not exclude the people from their right to present petitions and memorials, which is a constitutional right and which we can not dispense with until we have changed the rules, to say the least of it, if we can ever do that. The next order of business is reports from committees. The next order of business is bills and joint resolutions. The next order of business is bins and other resolutions. The Chair has always, without any omission, so far as I am aware, proceeded with that order of business; and if Senators have business to offer under these respective orders they have the right to do it.

Taking that view of the subject, I on yesterday presented a resolution which relates to the treaty-making powers of the Senate, which certainly are within the purview of any construction that might be placed upon our present rights or our present duties. That resolution came over from yesterday. No objection was made to it at the time, and I desire when it is reached in the regular order of business to submit some remarks upon it, and I expect to be able to do so unless the Senate shall violate its rules by cutting me off.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the Senator from Alabama is clearly right. When I submitted my amendment I said that I took the liberty to do so if there was nothing preliminary to it in the order of business. So supposing, I obtained the consent of the Senate to offer it at that time; but clearly the rules prescribing the order of business must be pursued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama call

for the regular order?

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order of business.

Mr. TELLER. I agree with the Senator from Alabama that this is a legislative session if we choose to exercise the power. That question was pretty thoroughly debated in 1893. While I think the consensus of opinion was that we had the power to legislate, we then resolved not to legislate. There is certain business that we must transact. It would be quite impossible for us to say, if a citizen or a number of citizens sent a petition here, that we could not receive the petition. I believe that we can do everything that the Senate can do when the House is in session. Of course we would not have any House bills, but we can pass all the course we would not have any House bills, but we can pass all the bills that we are authorized to originate. However, it has been the custom, I tkink, not to do that. It seems to me to be well for the Senate to determine that question in the very earliest stages of the present session. I do not know what is the resolution proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order has been called for. The presentation of petitions and memorials is first in order.

PETITIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lakeport, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all the islands of the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Webster, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the New Hebrides and other islands of the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of 150 citizens of Alexandria, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the New Hebrides and other islands of the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of George W. Williams and 47 other citizens of Beaver Falls, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further petitions or memorials, reports of standing and select committees are next in order. If there are no reports of committees, the introduction of bills and initial a bills and joint resolutions is in order. If there are no bills or joint resolutions, concurrent and other resolutions will be received.

TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. 1 sent to the desk a moment ago a resolution that I requested should be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I ask that it be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolu-

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby directed to investigate and report to the Senate the system of taxation in vogue in the District of Columbia and whether any portion of the tax laws contained in the organic act for said District is inoperative by reason of defective legislation; and also what changes, if any, should be made in existing law in order to secure an equitable adjustment of the burdens of taxation. For this purpose the committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, and to sit during the recess of Congress. The necessary expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Before the resolution goes out of the possession of the Senate, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, for my own information, and I think it is an interesting matter to for my own information, and I think it is an interesting matter to the public, whether the property of residents in the District of Columbia, both personal and real, is taxed as is ordinarily the case in other American cities; that is, does the tax system extend to personal property as well as to real property.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand the matter, a large part of the personal property in the District of Columbia is not taxed and has not been heretofore. It is furthermore a well-known fact that the text is now irregular, to say the least and that the taxation of real estate is very irregular, to say the least, and that some adjustment ought to be made. The desire is that the Committee on the District of Columbia shall take this matter up with a view to making an impartial examination and submitting a report to Congress as to what legislation may be necessary to secure equitable taxation. There is a great deal of complaint in reference. ence to this matter.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make out of order, by consent, one observation upon this very important subject, if I may. I had occasion to consider it, though I have not had for a long period the responsibility of being on any committee that dealt with the matter.

It seems to me there is just one simple principle that ought to be applied to the residents of the District of Columbia. We should ascertain the average rate of taxation in well-ordered American cities, whether it be $1 on the thousand, or $10 on the thousand, or $15 on the thousand, or whatever sum, and then apply that to or $15 on the thousand, or whatever sum, and then apply that to the personal property and real estate of every resident here.

When that is done, with such exemptions as experience suggests in all like cases, the Government should pay the rest of the reasonable expenses of this District. I do not think that having one-half paid by the District and one-half paid by the Government has any scientific merit whatever. There is nothing in reason why it should be one-half rather than two-thirds or three-fourths. The Government is a great property owner here, and the credit of the city of Washington is the credit of the nation. It is the national capital, and it is the great national interest to have a well-ordered and beautiful and well ornamented and arranged city here.

The complaint that the Government pays a part of the taxes seems to me to have no foundation in reason whatever. The Government ought to pay a large part of the taxes. The people here do not govern their own city; it is governed by the Government. The public property here is enormous in amount. It seems to me that that is the only fair and just way that has ever been suggested that I know of.

Let a man who comes here to dwell pay what he would pay in Let a man who comes here to dwell pay what he would pay in Providence, R. I., or in Dubuque, Iowa, which, without knowing anything about it, I am sure are well-ordered cities, because I know something of the character of their eminent citizens. When he has done that, let the Government pay the rest of the bills and spend money as lavishly or as economically as it may see fit.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to say a word in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Committee on the District of Columbia has already given some attention to this matter. It is not the purpose already given some attention to this matter. It is not the purpose of that committee in asking for this inquiry to interfere at all with the organic act. That is a law of the land and we do not propose to inquire about that at all or to make any recommendation, but we hope to be able to materially help in the adjustment of taxation so far as the citizens of the District are concerned, whether they live here permanently or temporarily.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. McCOMAS. I understood the Senator to say that there was no assessment and taxation upon personal property here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been so told. I presume there is some taxation, but it is certainly very low.

Mr. McCOMAS. There is assessment and taxation at the rate Mr. McCOMAS. There is assessment and taxation at the rate of a dollar and a half upon personal property. Much personal property is taxed; much escapes taxation. They have the payment also of water rents and other like obligations of resident citizens. But the system has prevailed since 1878 of taxing real and personal property at the rate of a dollar and a half.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is certainly a great deal of complaint in regard to the matter of taxing personal property, and in a debate recently held in another body it was boldly asserted that no such taxation was had, and it was not contradicted.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, much of the personal property escapes taxation and many persons who are here a part of the year in that way are absent at the time of the assessment and personal property is not successfully taxed; but the law ment and personal property is not successfully taxed; but the law is ample, comprehensive, and inclusive of all those who should be taxed here to a degree beyond most places. It may escape the operation of the law.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to ask the Senator from New Hampshire to allow me to interrupt him in order that I might make precisely the statement that the Senator from Maryland has just made. I happen to know that both personalty and realty are taxed here, and alike, at the same rate. At any rate, official notices requiring returns are sent out, and everybody should comply. Whether or not they do is a matter of fact with which I am not acquainted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the resolution will be referred without further debate. There is a grievance in connection with this matter that is well known to some of us who have served upon the Committee on the District of Columbia, both as to real and personal estate in the city of Washington. The committee certainly will not do any harm in making that inquiry and I feel. tainly will not do any harm in making that inquiry, and I feel sure that some good will result from it. It will be in charge, not of the Senator who introduced the resolution, but of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who requested me to introduce the resolution.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether this resolution has received the consideration of the Committee on the District of Columbia, or whether it is just now being introduced for reference to that committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this question has been discussed informally by the Committee on the District of Columbia. I think it never has been voted on. If the Senator desires that it shall first go to that committee, I have no objection whatever. It is a very common thing to offer such resolutions and have them go direct to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but I will move that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the regular course would be to have it referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, before that motion is put, I should like to hear the resolution read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution submitted by Mr. GAL-LINGER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan], which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. Morgan, as follows:

Resolution declaring the Clayton-Bulwer treaty abrogated.

Resolved by the Senate, That the treaty known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty between Great Britain and the United States, which was concluded on the 19th day of April, 1850, is abrogated.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, on two occasions previously I had the honor to present a similar resolution in the Senate, upon which final action was never taken; and no vote has been taken in the Senate, so far as I am aware, upon the subject which is now presented for the consideration of this body. In addressing myself to this subject this morning, I wish to assure the Senate, if I have in this body any reputation for sincerity, that my purpose is none other than to bring the attention of the Senate of the United States to the writing applications are proposed. States to the existing conditions, upon which I conceive that it is our duty to advise the President of the United States and, possibly, inform the Government of Great Britain.

For the first time in a long while the atmosphere is clear now of

all complications arising out of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by any negotiation that is pending.

In regard to the Isthmian Canal, we have but one possible right at this time, and it is a very important one, that is secured to the people of the United States by protocols of agreement that were made by the President last December with Costa Rica and Nicaragua. Those protocols have been before the Senate frequently. They have been reported here from time to time, so that I suppose that they are entirely understood, and it is not necessary at the present moment, at least, that I should introduce them into at the present moment, at least, that I should introduce them into my remarks; but I wish now to emphasize the proposition stated, that we have agreements with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and we have no diplomatic agreement or any other arrangement with any other government on this subject, except the Clayton-Bulwer

Whether we should execute those agreements with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, or whether we should abandon them, is a matter that is to be left to the consideration of Congress when it assembles in regular session. That subject can not now be considered by the Senate in this extraordinary session with any view or expectation of its becoming a final and conclusive decision. So I advert to that subject merely for the purpose of showing to the Senate, and to the people of the United States also, what is the actual situation now in regard to the rights of the United States relating to canal

Much has been said in debate here, and in correspondence between the President of the United States and M. Hutin, the president of the Panama Canal Company, in reference to the proposition that the United States Government should acquire privileges at Panama. That correspondence has been laid before the Senate, it having been sent to the Senate by the President of the ate, it having been sent to the Senate by the President of the United States. No definite proposition has ever come from the Panama Canal Company to the Government of the United States under which we could acquire any rights whatever in that canal.

M. Hutin and Mr. Cromwell have written letters directly to the President of the United States, which the President has sent to the Senate, commenting upon the general situation and the possibilities of president and the president a sibility of arriving at some arrangement under which the Panama Canal might possibly be constructed with the assistance of the Government of the United States. The President of the United States has never given any cognizance to those letters, so far as I am informed, except merely to receive them and transmit them

Mr. BACON. May I be permitted to suggest to the Senator the propriety and policy of incorporating those letters in his remarks, in order that we may have them in that connection as an appendix, if not otherwise?

Mr. MORGAN. I will incorporate them as an appendix to my

The President has sent in the report of the commission called the Isthmian Canal Commission, of which Admiral Walker is the president, in which they take the ground that there is no legal possibility—I may state it in that way, but that is not exactly the way in which they put it—that there is no legal possibility, under existing conditions and circumstances, of the United States acquiring any rights in the Panama Canal. They shut that off entirely by stating a certain legal situation, which they present in that report which absolutely forbids the consideration of the in that report, which absolutely forbids the consideration of the subject by the United States Government.

I might say here, Mr. President, that it seems to be impossible for the United States Government to take up the Panama scheme without giving offense to the Government of France unless we first approach that Government through the diplomatic powers of this Government and attempt to negotiate some arrangement with that Government for the acquisition of those rights. No effort of that kind has been made on the part of the United States with France, and so the subject has fallen dead.

I therefore exclude from the observations I make to-day the Panama Canal as a route open to us, there being no agreement in regard to it and no proposition for an agreement in respect of it, and it being impossible, according to the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, that there should be such an agreement.

So, I repeat, so far as we are concerned to-day we standalone, as to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, in our rights to build a canal in that region of country, upon the protocols of agreement which were signed, sealed, and delivered between the parties in Decem-

I will here, Mr. President, make a statement of some historical facts from the records of Congress, which it is very important should be noted, in order to get at the true merits of the present

The Senate has been legislating for a number of years upon certain concessions made to private citizens of the United States, who were afterwards incorporated under the name of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; and in that canal company we recognized the right of those people, and made it the basis of our legislation in making that act of incorporation. The Senate passed, by a vote of 11 majority, one of these bills to aid that corporation in building this canal, but it did not receive consideration in the House of Representatives. In the Fifty-fifth Congress the Senate passed by a vote of 8 to 1, 7 votes in the negative and 56 in the affirmative, another of these bills, corresponding almost exactly in its provisions with the previous bill. Under those bills the United States Government was to take over all the stock of the Maritime Canal Company and pay them a certain amount of money for the work they had done in obtaining the concessions and in working out the concessions under the laws of Nicaragna and in working out the concessions under the laws of Nicaragua and under their contract.

At the beginning of the Fifty-sixth Congress another change took place in the attitude of the Government toward this subject. For the first time a proposition was made in the Senate by a former Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Sullivan, that the Government of the United States would build this caual under rights to ment of the United States would build this canal under rights to be secured from Nicaragua and Costa Rica with money to be drawn from the Treasury, and would have the exclusive control and management of that canal. That bill went to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and was reported back favorably. Almost contemporaneously with that measure, however, a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives, which was known as the Hepburn canal bill, No. 2538.

We must give attention to the dates as we go along, so as to ascertain the exact attitude of Congress toward this measure. The Hepburn canal bill was introduced in the House December 7, 1898; it passed the House on May 2, 1900; it was sent to the Senate on May 3, 1900; referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and on the 14th day of May that committee reported the bill back to the Senate; it went upon the Calendar, and it there remained until the close of the recent session of Congress.

On the 21stday of May I moved in the Senate the consideration of that bill, and that motion was voted down, being antagonized by what was called the Spooner bill, for the government of the Philippine Islands. On June 2, 1900, I asked the unanimous consent of the Senate to make that bill the special order for the 10th day of December, 1900, and that order was made. So that both Houses of Congress were in full tide of legislative action upon both Houses of Congress were in full tide of legislative action upon the subject of this canal, and the diplomatic powers of the Government had not then been interposed as a bar to legislative action.

Now, with a view of taking this subject out of the hands of Congress, as I must suppose, the lawmaking power, the Government, through its diplomatic functions and agents, had instituted a negotiation with Great Britain which resulted in what is called the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which was completed on the 5th of February, 1900, and sent to the Senate on the same day—two months, wanting only two days, before the Hepburn bill had been reported to the Senate.

I wish to call attention to that situation with a view of bringing the attention of the Senate to a proposition of comity and of constitutional law. This question arose on the 5th of August, 1900. When the House of Representatives and the Senate are engaged when the House of Representatives and the Senate are engaged in legislating upon a subject over which they have full and complete jurisdiction, they have the right to proceed to conclude that legislation without the intervention of the diplomatic powers of the Government—the President and the Senate as a diplomatic body; and for the diplomatic body to assume jurisdiction and power, to take upon themselves the control of a subject that has already passed one House, that has come to the other and is under consideration, raises a very grave question of comity, to say the least of it.

Under the decisions of the Supreme Court upon the question of the right of Congress as a legislative body to enact laws about treaties that have been confirmed and ratified by the Senate, to annul them or to repeal them, I suppose no question can now be made. Since the action of Congress on the famous French alli-ance, there has been no doubt at all left in the minds of jurists that ance, there has been no doubt at all left in the minds of jurists that the legislative powers of the United States in Congress are supreme over the diplomatic functions exercised by the President and the Senate. It is regarded as one of the essential liberties of the people of the United States that, through their representatives in Congress in both Houses, they may assert their will as against a certain department of the Government represented by the President of the Congress of the Congr dent and two-thirds of the Senate of the United States in ratify-

- The powers of Congress are not only supreme in this matter, but they are conclusive; they are irrevocable, and that is the pe-culiarity of our Government which differentiates it, I believe, from any other Government in the world. When our fathers were laying the basis of our constitutional organization and our were laying the basis of our constitutional organization and our liberties, they put it in the power of the Congress of the United States to exercise supreme legislative authority in this country, to respond to the will of the people who having to fight the battles necessary to carry their will into effect are entitled to have a voice in this Government in respect of the treaties with foreign countries, and they made Congress supreme over the diplomatic powers conferred upon the President and the Senate. The Hay-Pauncefote treaty contained a provision that its ratification should be exchanged within six months from the date of its signature. That time expired on August 5, 1900, the treaty having been concluded and signed on February 5, 1900. That treaty expired at that time. There was no longer an existing obligation between either of the Governments, because the Senate had not taken any action upon that treaty of a conclusive character prior to that time. It had to be revived and continued and put in force again. So, on August 5, 1900, the President concluded a convention with Great Britain for the purpose of extending the time vention with Great Britain for the purpose of extending the time until the 5th day of March, 1901—seven months.

There was a period of time, Mr. President, during which this treaty had no possible effect as between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States, if we had chosen not to accept its convention for extending the time for the exchange of ratifications. So the diplomatic powers of this Government—the President and the Senate, or the President, rather—interposed this treaty a second time for the purpose of arresting and taking out of the hands of Congress legislation upon this subject, or else for the purpose of aiding it—one of the two. The Hepburn bill had then passed the House and a day had been set for its consideration, on the 10th day of December, as a special order.

tion, on the 10th day of December, as a special order.

The Senate took that treaty under consideration and made some amendments to it. On the 20th day of December last that treaty was ratified with amendments; and those amendments were afterwards communicated to the Government of Great Britain. That Government had until the 5th day of this month as the period within which to exchange ratifications with us, if they should accept the amendments. This was ample time, in all courtesy, for the acceptance of the amendments by Great Britain, but she stood mute.

Mr. President, we have had this subject of the Nicaragua Canal and of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty before this country for more than fifty years; and I wish to appeal to the Senate now, to-day, and to all Senators present, whether any of them can point out a proposition that Great Britain has ever submitted to the Government of the House of the country ment of the United States in regard to any modification of this treaty, or in respect of any action that we have taken, by legislative proceedings, upon this treaty? There is no such action on the part of the Government of Great Britain.

During all these years, while we have been hugging to our bosom the hope that we should be able to build this great waterway for the people of the United States and the world, Great Britain has observed a profound but a golden silence. I call it "a golden silence," Mr. President, because it has been a golden harvest of wealth to Great Britain. During the years that she has thus kept Livernool as the center of the compares of the earth she has Liverpool as the center of the commerce of the earth she has reaped harvests from the labors of the people of the United States that are absolutely incalculable in figures. She has made her wealth and her power for more than one hundred and twenty-five years out of the fact that Liverpool has been the commercial cenyears out of the fact that Liverpool has been the commercial center of the world. We have sent everything to Liverpool that we had to spare for sale; and it has only been a very recent period in which we have attempted by various means to acquire the power to divide with Liverpool some part of the gains she has been making upon us.

If by her mere silence, as has been the case, Great Britain has been able to paralyze the powers of the United States, all of the departments—governmental, industrial, and commercial—I may well characterize that silence as being golden, for it has brought to her the lifeblood of her prosperity.

It has been for many years past, Mr. President, that the thirty-eight or forty millions of people in the islands of Great Britain have not been able to produce upon their lands enough cereals to support their population for three months in the year. They produce no cotton with which to clothe them; they produce no tobacco with which to gratify their tastes and appetites; they produce no sugar for the purpose of adding to the pleasure of their repasts; they do not produce any quantity of cereals at all adequate to the support of the people. They produce some wool, but not enough to put a single woolen garment upon the backs of her population.

She has derived all of these elementary supports of life and comforts almost exclusively from the United States or from Russia—more largely from the United States than from Russia or from any other of the granaries of the world. Her wool, of course, she has gotten from Australia and Argentina and from some other countries to a large extent. Notwithstanding this depleted condition of the resources of Great Pritain she has grown in wealth and tion of the resources of Great Britain, she has grown in wealth and power and greatness, and we are the only people in the world who have even attempted to keep pace with her. France has shrunk almost like a shriveled leaf in her presence; Spain has gone to naught; Italy has been almost forgotten; Germany, recently, in her activity in manufactures has come to the front and is a fair competitor with Great Britain in the arts of manufacture.

But the power and prosperity of Great Britain have been due to the fact, the one single geographical fact, that Liverpool has been and is to-day the commercial center of the whole world. That depends upon another single fact—that Liverpool is nearer to the markets of the earth than any other great city of the world. By the markets I mean the 18 or 20 great cities that skirt the shores of the South Atlantic and of the Pacific Ocean; so that shores of the South Atlantic and of the Facing Ocean; so that the disposition of Great Britain not to disturb or to have drawn in question any matter that arises out of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty so long as her silence is sufficient to keep us subdued is a golden silence. She has never ceased to contemplate with alarm the fact that the Nicaraguan Canal will make New York the commercial center of the world, and the only real competitor of Liverpool or London.

Great Britain, Mr. President, opposed most sternly the opening of the Suez Canal. She sent her minister to the Sublime Porte, and he there objected to what the Khedive of Egypt had done or was about to do with M. de Lesseps—granting him a charter for was about to do with M. de Lesseps—granting him a charter for a canal from Port Said to Suez.

When she found that the demands of the commercial world, particularly in Europe, had forced that canal through from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea, then Disraeli changed the policy of the British Government and bought up nearly the controlling interest in the stock of the Suez Canal. He bought about $50,000,000 of stock, and from that time until this, or at least for the past twenty years, Great Britain has realized a dividend upon that stock of 18 per cent per annum profit, and that stock, which was bought at par, is worth to-day more than 740 in the bourse at Paris and on the stock exchange in London. So in that respect her silence has been golden, and she has reaped enormous harvests of actual profit in gold coin from her investment in the Suez Canal, to which she was forced against the policy of her Government to which she was forced against the policy of her Government originally. It was by the shrewdness of Disraeli on one side and by the demands of Europe on the other that they would have that by the demands of Europe on the other that they would have that canal and they would find a nearer way to India than to go around the Cape of Good Hope that Great Britain's opposition to the Suez Canal was changed and she acquired control of it.

There can not be anything more precious or profitable to Great Britain to-day than to prevent the rivalry of the Nicaragua Canal. The Suez Canal and the Nicaragua Canal are the two gateways between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, one in the Eastern Hemisphere and the other correspondingly in the Western Hemisphere. There are no other places where these gateways can be made, and there is no government or people or potentate or man who can create the Nicaragua Canal except the Government of the United States. Great Britain understands that, and if by the preserva-States. Great Britain understands that, and if by the preserva-tion of her golden silence she can still prevent us from doing that work, her profits will not only continue, but will increase from the fact that she shuts out the competition of the Nicaragua Canal. Now, while we are here, Mr. President, paying special regard to comity, politeness, and generosity of treatment and nobility of action toward Great Britain, she remains doggedly silent still—as silent as the Sphinx on the banks of the Nile that seems to look out upon a desert of wasted American opportunity and, sad to say, American honor. She is still silent, and her silence is more say, American honor. She is still silent, and her silence is more richly golden. When we came to act upon the Hay-Pauncefote treaty we found, at least all the real friends of the President found, that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty had superseded the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by its necessary terms, and that if the Hay-Pauncefote treaty had been ratified in the words in which it was sent to the Senate of the United States there would not have been a shred or a shadow of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty left. Some Senators, from a nice sense of verbal criticism or from some other motive—it is not for me to impute motives at all—found occasion to change the text of that treaty and made a report to the Senate of the United States for a change in the a report to the Senate of the United States for a change in the a report to the Senate of the United States for a change in the text in one particular, leaving all the balance of it to stand.

There was opposition to that treaty in the Senate, on this side of the Chamber especially, because it was assumed to be an acknowledgment on our part of a superiority of Great Britain in dictating to us what we should do about a question that is and ought to be purely American. The old rancor of British antagonism and resentment, growing out of wrongs she has done us—for she is the only nation in this world except Algiers that has ever done us a willful wrong—was hard to put down. It had its root in the popular sentiment, and is here yet, and some of the gentlemen who wanted to make a change in the text of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty without changing its meaning in the slightest degree seemed to be apprehensive of political effects if something was not done to signify to their partisans and friends that they had some antagonism to Great Britain which was of a peculiar and special sort. So that great and splendid treaty, than which no treaty that has been made in the United States has been greater or better, had to die at the hands of the friends of the Administration, and it so turned out that I was the only member of the committee who interposed a dissenting report for the purpose of preserving that worthy document from sacrifice at the hands of its natural friends, but its real enemies.

It was not only perfectly understood, but it was stated openly

It was not only perfectly understood, but it was stated openly

in the Senate, at the last session of Congress before the December session, by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who has gone to his proud reward and now exists amongst us as a model of honor and integrity as well as of great ability, and whose presence is here to-day and is felt in the Senate, that he would not call the Hay-Pauncefote treaty during that session of Congress, and his refusal to call it in the executive sessions of this body caused the time to expire for the exchange of ratifications and killed the treaty. Notwithstanding it was a very severe blow which had been inflicted upon it by its supposed friends, the President went forward, as I remarked a while ago, and nego-tiated for a new convention to extend the time for the exchange of ratifications until the 5th day of March, 1901, seven months after the former period had expired. In that interval of seven months the Senate again took up the treaty, considered it, put the amendment on it which had been placed there by the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations and some other amendments which were suggested in executive session, and the President of the United States thereupon submitted those amendments to the Government of Great Britain.

If Great Britain had received some long-desired favor in that treaty, its acceptance would have been cabled across the ocean with electric speed.

In the meantime there came the death of that royal and grand woman. Victoria, for whom there is no American, and especially no American woman, who does not entertain a feeling of most no American woman, who does not entertain a feeling of most profound respect, amounting in their bosoms to a sense of love. That was pleaded here as a reason why we should not consider the legislative proposition that passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 223 to 26, and we yielded to it. It was a proper courtesy on our part to yield to it. At the same time the war in South Africa went on. Cannon boomed there, and lyddite shells exploded amongst the Boers, and farms were robbed, and all the deventations of horsid war, were perpetuated in South Africa. the devastations of horrid war were perpetrated in South Africa, while the grand Queen lay a corpse in her stately palace. In China Great Britain did not recede from any of her activities. Men were made to bow upon their knees, and, with the consent of the United States Government, to have their heads cut off without a trial. All of these harsh operations of government were continued while the bier on which Victoria rested was worshiped like an altar of Christ.

Mr. President, that was an era of overwhelming sentiment, and the Senate of the United States pretended to be so affected by it that it could not proceed to take care of the interests of the American people. Day after day, as chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, I labored with this body personally and privately and publicly to get the Senate to devote as much as ten minutes to the passage of the Hepburn bill, but I was all the time put off with promises which were afterwards scouted, and the bill was lost. If the President of the United States had not intervened to make this question one of diplomacy and had let Congress go along with its perfect constitutional right to deal with it gislative question, this trouble would not have existed and that bill would have passed, and the canal would have been on its way, at least legislatively, to construction.

Another treaty had been negotiated many years ago at the close of the Administration of President Arthur, Frelinghuysen was his Secretary of State, and Zavala was President of Nicaragua, and the President sent in here a treaty which conferred upon the Government of the United States greater rights than have been conferred even by the protocols which President McKinley negotiated last December with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, rights which we will never acquire from Nicaragua and Costa Rica under any other treaty that we can negotiate with them. The terms were in all respects admirable. In the closing days of the Arthur Administration, for about two or three months we were engaged in a debate upon the ratification of that treaty with all of these splendid rights conferred upon the Government of the United States in that connection. We then debated the effect and influence of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty upon that negotiation with Nicaragua until it was thoroughly explored. Mr. Bayard, an honest and honorable gentleman, was then in this body, and had been selected, as we all knew, to be the Secretary of State in Mr. Cleveland's first Administration. Mr. Cleveland had been elected President of the United States, and Mr. Frelinghuysen and President Arthur bequeathed to the United States the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty as the richest legacy they could bestow upon us.

The combat over that treaty raged fiercely here for weeks. I had the honor of participating in that debate in antagonism to the Hon. Thomas F. Bayard. When we came to take the vote there was wanting just 1 vote of a two-thirds majority to ratify the treaty. Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, changed his vote so as to get an opportunity to move to reconsider. So the record shows that there are 2 votes wanting. The fact was, there was but 1. Reconsideration commenced almost immediately, but it was con-ducted upon those principles of filibustering which the other day destroyed the river and harbor bill, and we never got a chance to come to a vote upon the treaty again. But if we had come to a vote it would have been ratified, and the canal to-day would have been in operation. Not such a canal as we need, I grant you, but it would have been a canal, and to-day we would be engaged in it would have been a canal, and to-day we would be engaged in the work of enlarging it, so as to meet the enlarged dimensions of ships of commerce. But there we lost an opportunity.

The President-elect of the United States, when he was inaugurated on the 4th of March, made it the first act of his Administration on the 5th day of March, when the Senate met in extraordinary session, as they are this morning, to withdraw that treaty, as he said, for further consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Cleveland?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Cleveland. And he withdrew it, and when he came to inform us of what disposition he had made of it—for he came to inform us of what disposition he had made of it-for he felt then that the people were demanding it in such a way that he could not treat it as Great Britain has treated us on this subject, with silence—he sent a message to the Congress of the United States in which he said he opposed the treaty, and withdrew it, and would not send it back to the Senate for two reasons. One was that it created entangling alliances between us and Nicaragua, the country we were dealing with to get all these rights, which nearly removed the sovereignty of Nicaragua from its foundations and gave us a power that we will never get again unless we go with arms and make a contract.

The other reason was that it stood opposed to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. That was the most practical and the most important enunciation of the power and efficacy of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty that ever occurred in the United States, and Mr. Cleveland swept that Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty from the board into oblivion upon the ground that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was opposed to it and we had no right or privilege of exercising our treaty-making power with Nicaragua for the acquisition of these rights. Now, last December the same thing occurred with Mr. McKinley. Mr. McKinley went to Nicaragua and Costa Rica and made these protocols of agreement, which stand right square across the path of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and violates it absolutely, if it is possible to violate that treaty

So the Senate to-day is in the same position in regard to these protocols that the Senate was when acting upon the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty. The rights acquired under those two protocols are perhaps as broad as those acquired under the Zavala treaty, but they have not yet settled all the points in their details, for the reason that those treaties are only preliminary protocols and the balance of the negotiation has not yet been concluded. As far as they have advanced they are conclusive agreements, binding on the signatory powers. They are all that we have in the nature of canal privileges. When we throw them away to please Great Britain or the speculators in the Panama jobs, we will have betrayed our country.

But in these preliminary protocols there is a provision that certain parts of the treaty shall take effect forthwith, not waiting for the ratification of the Senate or for further negotiation. They take effect forthwith. What are those provisions? They locate the line of the canal, its terminal points, and that it shall pass from Greytown through Lake Nicaragua to Brito, and that it shall correspond with the delimitations which are mentioned in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is it not true that the protocol, so far as the "forthwith" part of it is concerned, says that further negotiations are to proceed on the basis of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which has now failed?

Mr. MORGAN. The Hay-Pauncefote treaty was not made a part of the agreement between the United States and Nicaragua and Costa Rica. It was only referred to as matter of description to define the terms of our contract, to which Great Britain was not a party.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is it not referred to in the protocol? Mr. MORGAN. It is a mere reference to ascertain the terms of the contract; that is all. The contract stands without reference to that treaty, except to determine what its terms are. There is no provision there that the failure of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty would annul the contract. There is nothing like it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; but if I remember the treaty—I may not quote the words of it—it says that the forthwith action shall proceed upon the basis of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. I think the word "basis" is used in the very last line of it. If the Senator has before him the protocol, will he read it?

Mr. MORGAN. Before reading the protocol, as I shall be required to do in the course of my argument, I wish to advert now to the situation in China. I will read these protocols to the Senate when I have compared them with our Chinese protocols.

There was an outbreak in China against our missionaries and the Christian people of Chinese origin, led by a party of people there called the Boxers and aided and encouraged by certain princes and potentates who belong to the Chinese Government, Those men commenced an attack upon the foreign legations in Pekin. They killed the German ambassador and a Chinese secretary of legation, I believe he was, and besieged all the balance of the legations and caused them to remain there under a siege, and to resist a siege as terrible as any that was ever, I think, witnessed in the annals of time. It was resisted with a courage that is very remarkable, and that will go down through the ages to come as one of the finest exhibitions of the power of men, controlled by justice and right and principle, in defense of their rights and privileges and lives in that great walled city of Pekin.

All honor to those noble men and women who have added another glory to the crown of Christian civilization.

The President of the United States, rightfully, as I believe, and in obedience to our treaty rights in China, sent ships of war to the coast of China and soldiers to Pekin to relieve our ambassador there and others from this siege. After that relief had been given, in consequence of some splendid military movements, which are of great credit to the military history of several of the European powers and of the United States also, all of those powers, in conjunction with the United States, entered into a protocol of agreement with the United States, entered into a protocol of agreement with the United States, entered into a protocol of agreement with the United States, entered into a protocol of agreement with the United States, entered into a protocol of agreement with the European or European of China sout Line. ment with China. The Emperor or Empress of China sent Li Hung Chang and some others for the purpose of negotiating a treaty of peace. There was a preliminary agreement required to be made by China. I need not go over the terms of it, for I do not know what they were. The newspapers alone have informed me, or the Senate, that such a treaty was ever made. Why the President has not informed us is so strange a fact that I forbear to comment upon it. I might do some one an injustice.

The Senate of the United States, a coordinate treaty-making power, has never had any information on that subject from the power, has never had any information on that subject from the President, except merely that a state of war is pending over there. But he entered into this preliminary protocol of agreement, and that contained a provision also that there should hereafter be a further negotiation in regard to the basis of compensation for the outrages that had been perpetrated by Chinese people and the Chinese Government, the Boxers included amongst the people.

We do not know what that agreement was. The Senate has not been informed of it. We know, however, that amongst the terms of that agreement was a requirement that certain of the princes of the realm should be delivered up to death, that China would execute her laws upon some of them, and others should be would execute her laws upon some of them, and others should be executed by the military powers who then had two of them in custody. Those sentences have been executed and men have died without trial by any court or any tribunal whatever. They died upon the mere diplomatic demand of these associated powers, I upon the mere diplomatic demand of these associated powers, I will say, and yet we have had no notice of what has taken place. Now, is that conduct on the part of the President of the United States legitimate? Does it fall within the purview of his constitutional power? I claim that it does, but there are many in the United States, and some of them on both sides of this Chamber, who resent that statement very bitterly. We have that question to meet, and we will then have to determine whether the President of the United States in the avecation of his constitutional dent of the United States, in the execution of his constitutional powers, had the right to make this agreement with Li Hung Chang and other representatives of the Chinese Government and carry it into execution without first having submitted it to the Senate for its ratification. We have that question to meet. What are we going to do about it? Will we run off from it? Will we deny to the President the constitutional right to do what he has done there? If we should do that, the next inevitable result would be an impeachment, for if a President of the United States can go out among the nations of the world and slay men or have them slain by his Army as a part of an agreement with the diplomatic powers of other governments and has no constitutional warrant for it, I will not here express what that crime would be, but it would be a crime against civilization, Christianity, and certainly against the laws and Constitution of the United States.

The proposition, therefore, that the President has a right to conclude a protocol of agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica for obtaining rights that they have heretofore conceded to us under the Zavala-Frelinghuysen treaty is a very innocent looking thing to my mind compared with what has occurred in China. We have that question to meet; and now, to show exactly what the protocol was that Mr. McKinley executed in December, I will

Protocol of an agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Costa Rica in regard to future negotiations for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua.

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Costa Rica as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near San Juan del Norte, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually engage to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plan and the agreement in detail, found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal.

It is my duty to say here that that language is copied out of the Hepburn bill, passed by the House of Representatives.

As preliminary to such future negotiations it is forthwith agreed that the course of said canal and the terminals thereof shall be the same that were stated in a treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on February 5, 1900, and now pending in the Senate of the United States for confirmation, and that the provisions of the same shall be adhered to by the United States and Costa Rica.

In witness whereof the undersigned have signed this protocol and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me a moment? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator understand the language "that the provisions of the same would be adhered to by the United States and Costa Rica" to refer to?
Mr. MORGAN. The provisions of that treaty were the same in substance and almost in words with the provisions of a treaty made at Constantinople in 1888, in which all of the European powers of any magnitude entered, for the regulation and control of the Suez Canal, putting it upon a basis of neutrality, which is therein described, and giving to the nations of the earth the right to use it, and calling upon the nations of the earth to protect it, that being considered equivalent to and a very much better method of protection than to undertake to protect it by fortresses exected at the termini or anywhere else upon that canal. They adhered to the principles of that treaty, Costa Rica and the United States and Nicaragua and the United States.

Nicaragua and Costa Rica had not been parties to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, nor parties to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, nor parties to the treaty of Constantinople in 1888. They were in no wise responsible for it or connected with it; but by agreement with the United States they adopted the principles of that treaty as being their guide in making this agreement, that treaty being referred to merely for the purpose of getting the terms upon which these two Governments agreed.

Nicaragua and Costa Rica had had no diplomatic intercourse with Great Britain on this subject. She never had, and was not a party to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty in any respect, unless she chose to adhere to it hereafter. So she put that provision in there not as a condition of her obligation, but as a mere matter of description to define what her contract with the United States actually contained.

Mr. SPOONER. But, if the Senator will pardon me, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty contained a provision for the adherence not of certain governments, but all governments.

Mr. MORGAN. All governments,

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator understand that this

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator understand that this last clause is an agreement of adherence by Costa Rica and Nicaragua to the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty?

Mr. MORGAN. Just so; I do. That adherence did not depend upon whether that treaty was ratified by the Senate of the United States. Nicaragua never put her rights at stake upon the action of the Senate of the United States. She provided for her safety by a contract with the Government of the United States, and that contract stands, whatever might happen to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. I have thought, if the Senator will pardon me that referring in this clause to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and to the fact that it is pending in the Senate for confirmation, the agreement of adherence would be nothing more than a provisional agreement; that is, that it could have no effect if the Hay-Pauncefote treaty were not confirmed.

Mr. MORGAN. It would have just as much effect as if it had become a treaty, because Nicaragua was not a treaty power, and what she adopted there was such principles for the conduct of the canal through Nicaragua as she found to be convenient and necessary for her own safety and her own benefit, and she would adhere to those and insist upon those whether the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was ratified or not.

Mr. SPOONER. Then would the Senator think that if the Hay-Pauncefote treaty had been ratified Nicaragua and Costa Rica would not have become by adherence under this treaty practically signatory powers? Mr. MORGAN. Mr. MORGAN. They could not adhere to an agreement merely by stipulation with the President of the United States. In order to adhere their Governments would have to take the treaty as ratified and pass an act of adherence independently of this con-

Mr. SPOONER. That is, under their constitution?
Mr. MORGAN. Yes; that is the situation exactly. No, sir; there is no condition precedent or subsequent in this contract at all, and we will very soon see the day when we will take the opan, and we will very soon see the day when we will take the op-posite side of that question with a great deal of vigor and a great deal of persistence, because, in the language of Gen. Peter Hains, who is a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, in a letter he wrote me yesterday, "At the end of a year the difficulties in Nicaragua may be greatly increased." He knows what he is doing and what he is talking about, that by the end of a year intervenors will come in for the purpose of trying to put Nicaragua in a position where she can say that we have released her from that contract by our failure to act here in a legislative capacity upon the subject. Whatever may be the virtues of Nicaragua, she can not more easily escape the seductions of the Panama Canal lobby than Congress has been able to do.

Now, I had as well say here as anywhere, and better, too, that on the last night of the session of the last Congress, which has just expired, I asked unanimous consent that the Hepburn bill should be taken up and passed, and stated as my reason for it that that would secure to us the benefits of this contract with Nicaragua, necessarily, so that they could not escape from it, and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], having that power over me, rose and objected. He smiles at it, but, Mr. President, I believe that Senator would smile at the wreck of this country if it brought any money to the people he represents.

The Senator from Rhode Island objected to it. I knew as well as any Senator on this floor that I then had the right to move the consideration of that bill and have a vote on it; but I believed that a party majority had been arranged so that I could not get a favorable vote, and I determined that that Congress, so far as I was concerned, should adjourn without any adverse action upon that concerned, should adjourn without any adverse action upon that proposition, and leave it hanging here; and when we shall hereafter come to claim the benefits of this treaty, you, gentlemen of the Senate, will be bringing that record here for the purpose of satisfying the country and satisfying Costa Rica and Nicaragua that you have still got a right, and that it was not disposed of, and that it was not cut off, because you did not have time to pass the bill. To my extreme mortification, personally, I left it in that attitude for the sake of my country, and there it is to-day. You will be making that argument. The Senator from Rhode Island objected, and the Senator from Alabama did not insist upon going on for the reason that it was obvious there was not time, in the on for the reason that it was obvious there was not time, in the face of an objection, to act upon that bill.

Thank God, Mr. President, our rights are still existing, notwithstanding the conduct of the Senator from Rhode Island. He could standing the conduct of the Senator from Rhode Island. He could not destroy them. He would have done it if I had been rash enough to have demanded a vote of the Senate upon that proposition and it had been rejected. Then Nicaragua and Costa Rica would have been released from this agreement that now stands to-day and has a much firmer footing in all respects than the agreement made by the President of the United States for the disposal of the rights of our country in China.

What are we to say to the world when the Chinese question comes up except that the President of the United States had the right to make that agreement? How can we save his honor or his office in his hands against an impeachment by denying that he had the right to make that protocol of agreement and bind the United States to it? If he had the right to make that, did he not have the right to make this?

I am a simple-minded man, Mr. President, and when I run up against a truth that I can not possibly overcome, dig under, or flank, I surrender to it. I do not console myself with the idea that the common, good people of this country will not find out what I have been doing and will not sit in judgment upon my action. They will find it all out. They will understand you and me, and they will not cease to pronounce their judgment with that spirit of just and honest severity which belongs to a free and noble people when they have suffered a great wrong. They will not forget us when we forget our duty to the country.

Now, the diplomatic power of the United States Government, the President and the Senate, have interfered with the House of Representatives to put aside that grand and majestic vote that they sent to us, 223 against 26, after due debate and consideration and when Mr. Cannon of Hillings got up and said to them as and when Mr. Cannon of Illinois got up and said to them, as I could easily quote from the Record, and have several times quoted here, "You are not in earnest about this matter; you are not acting honestly; you intend to pass this bill through the House of Representatives with the full expectation that it will be killed in the Senate"—that is what he said to them—"and you are taking this action in order to curry favor with the people at this moment of time, intending to deceive them hereafter. You may deceive yourselves, gentlemen," he said, "but you can not deceive the people. They will look into your motives; they will see what you are doing and what it is that inspires your conduct upon this occasion." Mr. Cannon was a prophet; and prophets are not without honor, save in their own country. He has not reaped any honors from this, but I think that the country will hereafter hear his warning voice when he has the manhood to rise up and say to his party, "I understand you, I understand the Senate; this canal bill is to be delivered over into the Senate for the purpose of its crucifixion, and when Mr. Cannon of Illinois got up and said to them, as I delivered over into the Senate for the purpose of its crucifixion, of destruction, and for no other purpose, and that will be the end of it." And that was the end of it.

Now, Mr. President, it was not proper treatment of the House for us to have acted in that way. I am not complaining of it now at all. I shall make no advantage in favor of the proposition that I am now trying to discuss by making complaint of anybody for anything they have done. I am looking now entirely to the present and the future.

What I am trying to do besides trying to vindicate the honorable relations that ought to exist between the House of Representatives and the Senate and besides trying to vindicate the honorable relations that ought to exist between the Senate as a diplomatic body and as a legislative body is to vindicate our rights. I am trying to do this, Mr. President. I do not know that I will succeed, but it is my duty to try it.

I am trying to convince the President of the United States and Lord Pauncefote and the British cabinet, whoever they are, Lord Lansdowne and others, that now that they have frowned down the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and by their silence have destroyed it, there is no possibility to deal with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, either in a legislative sense or in a diplomatic sense, with the either in a legislative sense or in a diplomatic sense, with the United States Government otherwise than merely to put it to death, if it is not already dead. We will make no compromise with Great Britain on that subject. We will make no concession to Great Britain in respect of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. All that we will do with it—and some of our people are even opposed to that—we will take it up and declare that it is abrogated, at least as to all of its unexecuted parts.

If a vote can be taken on this recolution Mr. Precident either

If a vote can be taken on this resolution, Mr. President, either on a motion to refer it to a committee or otherwise, I would very much prefer a direct vote upon it. We will inform the President of the United States that he has not a two-thirds majority in the Senate to pass any compromise that he may make with Great Britain about the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. If Great Britain wants a share of Alaska or an entrance into Alaska through the present modus vivendi as a condition precedent of releasing us from the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, she will not get it; or if her purpose is still longer to delay so that she may put in the sickle with which she reaps this vast harvest of gold out of the fact that our commerce is cut off by our distance between New York, our great central mart, and the great cities of the South Atlantic and the entire Pacific on both sides—if that is her expectation she will not get it; or if she has a determination that she will pick a quarrel with us about it and she is holding it in reserve for some convenient opportunity to do that thing, after she gets through with the Boer war, she will find that the United States can muster at least one-half the number of fighting men who voted for Presi-dent in the last election, and that is 7,000,000 people. She will find when that war terminates that the steel band that binds the throne in London with Australia and India and passes through Canada will be rent in twain, and with it down will go the Empire. Tear up that railroad which Great Britain built through Canada and all the powers of the world can not preserve the British Empire in its integrity. She will find that her possessions in the Caribbean Sea have lapsed. She will find that sessions in the Caribbean Sea have lapsed. She will find that the picket outposts or fortresses that she has kept here hovering next to our coasts and looking down upon us with her guns all pointed toward the west, toward the United States, from Nova Scotia around to the Yucatan, will pass out of her possession. She will find that she has overtaxed our patience; that she has abused our generosity; that she has started with a new King upon a new career that will wind up with a dissolution of the Empire and reduce him to be the royal sovereign of his own islands.

This world, Mr. President, is in a state of violent commotion. Not only is it the case in South Africa, not only is it the case in China, not only is it the case in the Philippines, but what we did here the other day has launched an ultimatum in Cuba that has here the other day has launched an ultimatum in Cuba that has aroused that people with thoughts of resistance against the power and authority of the people of the United States that may cost us blood and will surely cause their destruction if they resist our ultimatum. Not only so, but in the Austrian Parliament fury un-bridled and uncontrolled rules the Government. Not only so, but in the House of Commons the Irishmen are being dragged out by the heels and there is turbulence there. Does Great Britain suppose that she can escape from all the requirements and all the terrors of the existing situation and the prospective situation, and that she can find a time that is meet and fit and safe for exercising that she can find a time that is meet and fit and safe for exercising her military power against the United States?

I do not boast, Mr. President—I would be ashamed to do it—of the power of the United States in money and production, in men, in valor. I do not boast of these things; I am conscious of them, and I glory in that consciousness, not for the sake of inflicting harm or wrong upon any State or any human being that lives in the world, but because I know that when the supreme moment comes and any power in this world undertakes to bridle us with restraints and restrictions upon our sovereignty, such as are contained in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, resistance to the bitter end will be the decree of the American people. And that resistance will mean the wiping out of any government on this earth that undertakes that task undertakes that task.

So I am speaking with freedom. For the first time in a long while I am speaking now, Mr. President, as if the yoke of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty had been removed from my neck and that this has been done by the act of Great Britain. She has refused to accept propositions that were honorable to her and to us, just to all the world, beneficial to all the races and generations of the world yet to be born. And she has done it for some motive which is so profound, so far-reaching, that she is afraid to express it.

I repeat, in all these fifty years that we have been negotiating with Great Britain she has never yet stated her ground; and the President of the United States, who has been importuning her for the last two months to come out and make a declaration of what she wanted and what she intended to do, has been unable to get one wanted and what she intended to do, has been disable to get one whisper of response—nothing but stolid silence, and that which is implied from it, "You know my strength, you know my resolution, you know my determination. Bow to it; get out of the way, while I march forward with the grand lines of my policy." That is the attitude of the United States and Great Britain to-day, and I propose to relieve it if I can.

and I propose to relieve it if I can.

I have commented to some extent, Mr. President, upon the duty that the diplomatic branch of the Senate owes to the legislative branch here and in the House of Representatives. When I reported a resolution exactly of the same terms from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals I drew up a report for the committee, which was not dissented to by any member of the committee and was put on record here. The report is very brief, as compared with the importance of the subject, but it deals particularly with the question of the duty that the Houses owe to each other and the duty the diplomatic branch of the Government owes to the legislative branch, which is the supreme branch of the Government. I will ask leave to insert that report in my remarks. It deals with the subject fully, and it is not necessary for me now deals with the subject fully, and it is not necessary for me now to undertake to read extracts from it. [See appendix.]

It may be that this resolution will be sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I wish before that is done to show what that committee has done. Desiring to have this question submitted to that great committee, which deals with our foreign relations, I benefit the server described by the committee of the server described by the committee of the server described by the server describe thought it was my duty, even after having reported from a standing committee of the Senate this same resolution, to present the questions I have been discussing here to day in the form of resolutions, which were sent to that committee by the Senate. I will read the first and second of these resolutions which follow the recital of the protocols entered into by President McKinley with Nicaragua and Costa Rica. These are the resolutions:

Resolved, That the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of July 4, 1850, gives no right to Great Britain to demand that the Congress of the United States shall withhold its ratification of said agreements or shall abstain from legislation to provide for their prompt execution.

Resolved, That the ratification by Great Britain of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of February 5, 1900, as the same has been amended in the Senate, is not a condition precedent to legislation by Congress in providing for the execution of said agreements with Costa Rica and Nicaragua; nor are the principles or provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which was ratified July 4, 1850, any just or admissible ground of objection on the part of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty to the enactment of a law by Congress providing for the execution of such agreements with Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

These resolutions went to the Committee on Foreign Relations. After having considered them at three or four separate meetings a vote was taken and they were voted down by a party majority. There were 7 Senators present at that committee meeting, and 3 of them voted for the resolutions and 4 against them.

Now, these resolutions present, in essence, the very questions I am arguing here to-day. I ask the Senate the question whether or not the Clayton-Bulwer treaty gives a right to Great Britain to demand that the Congress of the United States shall withhold its ratification of the agreements of Nicaragua and Costa Rica or shall abstain from legislation to provide for their prompt execu-

When Mr. McKinley executed these two agreements with these two little Republics he certainly did know that they were exactly to the contrary of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Those protocols are no more reconcilable with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty than life is with death or light is with darkness. They are opposed to each other absolutely. Why did the President of the United States sign, seal, and deliver those protocols between him and Costa Rica and Nicaragua last December when he knew that they violated the Clayton-Bulwer treaty?

Did he intend to put them in his pocket and keep them there unknown to Great Britain, hidden away, so that she would not know anything about them until the Hay-Pauncefote treaty had been acted upon? I can not impute that to the President. But a know anything about them until the Hay-Pauncefote treaty had been acted upon? I can not impute that to the President. But a time arose upon the consideration of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty when he wanted those facts known. He wanted the world to understand what he had done and how true an American he was in the vindication of our rights in this country. Then the time came when the party in this body concluded that he had been acting a little hastily and treading upon the toes of King Edward VII and they had better ease him up; and here to-day there is forming in this body a sentiment, if not an organization, for the purpose of destroying the rights we have gained under these protocols for the destroying the rights we have gained under these protocols for the purpose of the maintenance of appearances between us and Great Britain.

The time for appearances, Mr. President, has passed away. The time for honorable agreement or open controversy and open action has come, and it can not be avoided by any effort that the President of the United States may make to patch up some of the amendments of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty hereafter; it is impossible. The President, with all his power and with the assistance of the head of his party in this Chamber, has not power and patron-age enough to prevent the destruction of any treaty that he may send here that makes one hair's breadth of concession to Great Britain beyond what we have already conceded. She scouts our amendments; she will not even pay us the deference to express her opinion upon them. She stands in that awful and ominous silence and says, "Behold, I withhold from you any statement of my opinion about what you have done or what you may intend to do. Take my from any hadrone with you as you deserved. of my opinion about what you have done or what you may intend to do. Take my frown, and begone with you, as you deserve. You have taken it so often and so patiently during the last fifty years that I feel it is rather a compliment to you that I should take occasion to repeat it." That is the attitude of Great Britain toward us to-day; and, Mr. President, if that attitude is maintained, the people of the United States are going to call somebody to a very severe account whenever we get up from our knees after imploring King Edward VII to make some arrangement with us based upon some new concessions. No, sir; there will never be a concession made in regard to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by the American Senate or the American people, except just only one, and that is to decree its death by mutual consent.

I have passed over the historical part of this subject, and I want to give a little attention to what I conceive to be the politico-economic or constitutional phases of the question, which, in my judgment, rise above all other considerations and demand of us that we should pass the resolution now before this body, which is not that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is hereby abrogated, or has been heretofore abrogated, or that the existing circumstances demand of us a declaration that it is abrogated; but, take the whole subject together take the whole attitude together the Senate in its of us a declaration that it is abrogated; but, take the whole subject together, take the whole attitude together, the Senate in its legislative capacity declares, not as a piece of legislation, but as a declaration of its opinion and conviction, that this Clayton-Bulwer treaty is abrogated, declares it as a fact reached by fifty years of experience, a fact reached by antagonism to the treaty from various sources, from the abuses that Great Britain has inflicted under it as mediated where the the training states have flicted under it, as well as the abuses that the United States has made of it in fastening upon Nicaragua and Costa Rica a condition that is a shame to our history.

There is one feature of the origin and existence of this treaty that has not been at all discussed, but it comes very closely home to us as an honorable people; and that is, whether Costa Rica and Nicaragua are bound by the Clauton Bulwar treaty. Nicaragua are bound by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. They own the soil through which this canal is to run; they are sovereign Republics and have been so recognized by the United States. We have ministers now accredited to each of those Governments. They are entitled to just as much respect at the hands of the United States as France, Germany, or Great Britain. They are Republics that have been born and cradled at our firesides, and if we had no higher motive than feelings of fraternity we ought to take care of their interests and see that they are not imposed upon and especially that they are not imposed upon by the United States.

For the United States to take upon itself to abuse one of those little Spanish-American Republics that have come into being because of their adoption of our system of government and of the institutions which are here would be a crime against nature. have higher obligations of respect to those little Republics than any other nation in the world. We put the cordon of the Monroe doctrine around them through the seas and beyond their outer boundaries on both the Pacific and the Atlantic, and we say to the transoceanic nations of the earth, "We stand here to protect those people against investor whenever you choose to investor those people against invasion whenever you choose to invade either of those Republics or any of those countries for the purpose of acquiring dominion there, and we will not permit you to use your power and your influence for that purpose." Proud and majestic attitude of the United States! Since the Declaration of American Independence there has never been an utterance that carried to the hearts of the people of the United States greater pride and satisfaction than the Monroe doctrine. Having thus embraced them within the ægis of our protection, we of course can not ourselves go against their Governments and break them down or fetter them in all of their constitutional rights and privdown or fetter them in all of their constitutional rights and privileges and in their national dignity. We can not do that.

But what did we do in 1850, and why did we do it? At that time neither Great Britain nor the United States had any rightful claim within the territories of Nicaragua or Costa Rica. The utmost claim that Great Britain had was to set up a protectorate over a lot of miserable, filthy, ignorant, savage Indians and to plant them across the San Juan River and the regions thereabouts, in order that she might establish a protectorate and claim a right of sovereignty, so as to exclude other countries from going up that river to hold commerce with the interior or across the country with the Pacific Ocean.

With that long forecast for which she has always been renowned. Great Britain planted that little colony of Indians there and undertook through that means to control the destiny of this canal, knowing that it was then and even for three centuries before that time accepted by the world as one of the most important places on the globe. She put those miserable Indians there and set up a right in their name, through their sovereignty and by their authority, to shut the United States out from acquiring by treaty any canal rights in Nicaragua, the real sovereign of the soil. From that time to this Great Britain has never for one moment relaxed her policy there; she has not in the slightest degree departed from it; it has been uniform, insistent, and persistent. It is the same policy now that it was in 1798, when she first made her establishment of the Mosquito Indians upon that coast. She has just as much right to come into the United States, to go to the State of Texas, and get the Comanches and persuade them to go down to the coast and there ext up a national government for the mealure, and to account there set up a national government for themselves, and to assume a protectorate over the Comanche Indians.

Nicaragua made a treaty with us which Great Britain objected to at that time, and it was upon this slender basis that she planted the assertion of rights that have stood like a upas tree, hovering with its deadly shade over all the rights of the United States from that hour to this. That is the original title upon which she depends for all the power she claims in that country.

That being so, after we had acquired the western coast of the United States through the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, with Mexico, at the close of that war, we naturally wanted an outlet to that part of our possessions across the Isthmus of Darien, and Nicaragua was the place Commodore Vanderbilt, that great and enter-prising American citizen, first chose for establishing a route of communication by steamboats and otherwise across that neck of land. There are only about 15 miles of land to be traversed in reaching from the waters of the Atlantic to the waters of the Pacific. He established himself there, and everything went smoothly enough until "Nicaragua Walker," as we called him, came down with a filibustering expedition and broke up the relations of the United States with Nicaragua, with whom we had been always friendly.

But in 1850, when Mr. Clayton, of Delaware, then Secretary of State, found that Great Britain had made this plant of the Mos-State, found that Great Britain had made this plant of the Mosquito Indians across the San Juan exit of Lake Nicaragua, and when Mr. Heiss had made a treaty more valuable than any treaty we have ever had, except the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty, with Nicaragua, Mr. Clayton at once said to Mr. Heiss: "You have no right to make this treaty." But they would not put it aside; they would not destroy it; they would not recede from it. We notified Great Britain that unless she made terms with us that were agreeable to our country we would ratify that treaty and were agreeable to our country we would ratify that treaty and

Great Britain shook her head at us as much as to say, "You do not dare to do it; you are not strong enough; you are just out of the Mexican war; many of your people were not in favor of that war; it was a reluctant war on the part of a great many of the American people, and you are not in a position to play the bully with one of the great powers, as we are." Clayton was so alarmed about it that after the treaty was concluded, in April, and it was brought before the Senate of the United States and debated here in the presence of many of the greatest men who have ever comin the presence of many of the greatest men who have ever occuin the presence of many of the greatest men who have ever occupied seats in this Chamber, it was concluded, after the vote had been taken privately in the Senate and it was found the treaty was going to be ratified, that they would postpone the publication of that ratification until the 4th day of July, so as to have a celebration that corresponded in its patriotic effusion with the celebration that belonged to the 4th of July, 1776. That was the spirit in which we made that treaty.

What were Costa Rica and Nicaragua doing all this time? Why did we not invite Costa Rica and Nicaragua into these conferences? What was the arrangement that was being made at that ences? What was the arrangement that was being made at that time between the two great Governments? That neither of them should have any right or privilege here in any conferences as to the construction of the canal; that neither of them should engage in it. That meant that no other government should have any; and in the next breath they provided that if their own citizens or subjects were to engage, under concessions from those States, in the building of this canal they should have the protection of both Governments. They meant to cover the whole subject and leave nothing out; they meant to control the destiny of Costa Rica and Nicaragua by an agreement that Great Britain and the United States made between themselves, to which they were not made parties and about which they were not even consulted.

What duty did the United States Government at that time owe to these two little Republics? I have referred to a part of it.

Perhaps that might be considered sentimental, but did we not owe them the duty of refraining from putting them in a condition where they could not go elsewhere on earth to make an agreement with any other nation to build that canal for them? That canal was worth a thousand times more to Costa Rica and Nicaragua than the Mississippi River is worth to the United States.

There were those two bullying Governments standing by and disposing of the destiny of Costa Rica and Nicaragua without consulting them for a moment while we have been under the length of the state of t sulting them for a moment, while we have been under the ban, so that we could not build that canal under rights which naturally and properly belong to those people. While we have been under that ban, where have been Costa Rica and Nicaragua? What power have they had? At what moment of time would the Governments of the United States and Great Britain consent that they might make an arrangement with Germany or France or Spain to build that canal? Not one moment of time. We tied them hand and foot, and they have been prone upon their backs from that day to this, we being a party to the crime of their false imprisonment.

Mr. President, when the President of the United States last December began to feel the inspiration of a patriotic breath in his bosom, and after he had been a second time most honorably elected to the great office of President of the United States, he concluded that he would do something that would indicate to the people in the outcome that he was a broad, patriotic American; that he was a friend of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, as he had been the friend of Creat Pritain and that he would get the present to their second company. of Great Britain, and that he would get her consent to their release; but he could not get an expression from her after the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was concluded. He then did what Mr. Clayton ought to have done in 1850. He resolved to go to the people who owned the land and ask them what they would do. He conceded their rights, that we had so long denied to these Republics.

During all this time that we have had this great circ'e of the Monroe doctrine guarding the independence and the liberties of those people this Government had not gone to Nicaragua and

Monroe doctrine guarding the independence and the liberties of those people this Government had not gone to Nicaragua and Costa Rica and asked them if they would not treat with us for a concession for a canal, through which we would make them a prosperous people. What has prevented it? The Clayton-Bulwer treaty! Congress is trying to get rid of it. It was moving with majestic step in the direction of justice and national honor; but the President of the United States intervened to take the whole which they are this dividual to the control of subject upon his diplomatic shoulders and those of the Senate in connection with him; and when he found that this was the true, honorable, just, and original source of right he sent to Costa Rica and Nicaragua and presented the question to them and said:

"What will you do for us? We have had two treaties with you heretofore. We have thrown them both aside—the Heiss treaty heretofore. We have thrown them both aside—the Heiss treaty and the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty. We have thrown them both overboard. What will you do now? Let us make a compact with each other. We can not complete it all at this time. There are conditions to be fulfilled about this matter that are important and that have to be considered, and then there are persons looking on here—Panama looking on—there are the robbers in New York with five corporate charters trying to get concessions and to get the control of any canal that may be built connecting the two oceans."

Do you suppose after that that the Congress of the United States is going away from it, "going back on it," as the vulgar but very apposite expression is? No. He was willing to trust Congress at that moment of time. He had not consulted the head of the procession then; he made the agreement, he signed it, he sealed it, and cession then; he made the agreement, he signed it, he sealed it, and delivered it, and said it should take effect forthwith; it should not wait for the action of Congress. There was the first act of justice that was ever done to Nicaragua and Costa Rica in connection with this very gravesubject. Mr. McKinley was the first man that ever went to them and asked them what they would do, and made an agreement with them and signed it, sealed it, and delivered it. If he does not abide by that agreement, Mr. President and gentlemen, so far as any reasons exist, of which we are informed, he will be the most odious breaker of contracts that ever represented this Government.

That a man of such vast power as the President of the United States should go to these little Republics and make that agree-ment and sign it and deliver it, and then break away from it, would expose him to such criticisms as would shock the country, unless the reasons for breaking away are such as that they are absolutely unavoidable. He might plead that "John Bull looked at me in such a savage way, and rocked his head on his bovine shoulders with such ominous and threatening majesty, that I did not dare to carry out this contract with you." Well, I do not believe he will ever say that.

the people who owned the land, and to the Governments to whom it belonged—and made a contract with them, and when I tried to get the Senate on last Saturday night to express its approval of those contracts, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], with a single objection, turned the whole matter bottom side upward. That Senator may enjoy that attitude. I do not know but that he does. These iconoclasts enjoy it very much when they are breaking up temples, although they are temples of justice, and even burning libraries, like that of Alexandria. I think they are in a happy mood of mind, provided their own property is not subjected to the torch.

Now, Mr. President, have we not done to Costa Rica and Nicaragua during these fifty years an inexcusable wrong? How did we get authority under the Constitution of the United States to inflict upon these two States that injustice? We see the wrong of it; we see the hardship of it; we see how these young States have been left out of the enjoyment of rights that they could fully have executed in combination with other governments and other people. Where do we get the authority—where did we find it in 1850 for doing this thing?

doing this thing? First of all, let us define what we did in 1850. We made a treaty of alliance or a coalition with Great Britain. Why do I say it is a treaty of alliance? Because it is a treaty that binds Great Britain and the United States to a certain line of action in reference to land that does not belong to them and the future rights of a Government that they had no right to control, and made between themselves a treaty under which neither of them got any positive right or settled any real difficulty. It was no treaty for the transfer of property from one Government to the other, for neither of them had a cent's worth of property in the whole subject. It was a pure combination between Great Britain and the United States that Costa Rica and Nicaragua should not build that canal by agreement with any foreign country in the world, for they were excluded from it, and that neither of these two Governments would build it.

Now, let me ask you, what would become of a treaty in the Senate of the United States, a solemn treaty between France or Germany and the United States, by which it was agreed that the United States would prove exercise any property in Canada? many and the United States, by which it was agreed that the United States would never acquire any property in Canada? What constitutional authority exists in this body to make a treaty of alliance with France or Germany to the effect that the United States will never acquire any property in Canada or any rights in Canada? The first question that would arise would be, "What rights have you got there?" "None whatever." "What do you expect to get there?" "Oh, we might get some very important rights." We might get the Welland Canal; we might get free and open navigation over the lakes and out through the St. Lawrence River; we might get the mines of the Klondike; we might get the vast wheat-bearing region of Manitoba; we might get access to Hudsons Bay. access to Hudsons Bay.

There are many things that we could get. We could shut Great Britain off from all access to the Pacific coast by getting the 700 miles of British possessions fronting on that ocean, and we make a solemn agreement with Germany or France that neither of us will ever acquire any rights in Canada of any kind or character. Who will undertake to find a place for an agreement of that sort in the Constitution of the United States? Let the one start with the in the Constitution of the United States? Is it consistent with the powers and duties of our Government, with any declared purpose of the Government of the United States, for which powers were delegated in the Constitution to Congress? Is it even included in the broad, sweeping blanket clause providing for the general wel-

That does not provide for the general welfare. The United States was not providing for the general welfare when it cut off all future generations for fifty years or a hundred years to come from all right to build a canal through the Isthmus of Darien. Was that any benefit to the United States that we can conceive of? Did Great Britain give us anything? She did not, because she had nothing to give us. There is no mutuality of consideration, but a pure naked alliance between Great Britain the United States affecting two countries. Costa Rica and Nicarague. United States affecting two countries, Costa Rica and Nicaragua, in which neither Great Britain nor the United States had the slightest interest

The Constitution of the United States never permitted Mr. Clayton to make that treaty, and though wise men sat upon it and ratified it other wise men have done similar things. John Marshall sat upon the question of the income tax and pronounced opinions that were considered to be fundamental, organic, and immoval; but we find here our Supreme Court, balanced by only one majority, and that majority shifting during the period of a month from a minority to a majority—we find how John Marshall was overruled in respect to the income tax. And so I propose to overrule these gentlemen, and, if I can, to make their shades happy by the fact that their children recognize what they had in their own breasts when Mr. Cass said: "If I had understood this treaty, I never would have voted for it; it would not have passed the Senate of the United States."

I say, Mr. President, that there has been no constitutional authority for the existence of that treaty, and the most that can be said for it at all is that the wise men of the United States in the Senate and in the Presidential chair from time to time have recognized it as a binding diplomatic agreement, and to that extent we are bound by it; but that does not cut us off from the inquiry as to whether the men who made it had the constitutional right to make it. We have that right to make it now, and we predicate it upon the basis that we have made another contract with Costa it upon the basis that we have made another contract with Costa Rica and Nicaragua which gives us the right and compels us to make the objection, and destroys the title of Great Britain to assert some imaginary right in that country which is not consistent with the sovereignty of Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

But not only is this treaty unjust, and not only has it no foundation in the Constitution of the United States, but there is a still worse form in which it is exposed to what I consider a just and an honest criticism. It is a perpetual alliance or coalition. No one can make anything else out of it but an alliance or coalition which what seach other out as Governments from assuming the right to shuts each other out as Governments from assuming the right to control a canal, and in the meantime shuts out Nicaragua and Costa Rica and all the balance of the governments of the world. Can we form with a foreign government a perpetual alliance? There is not a shadow of sanction for it in the Constitution of the United States.

We can not surrender our freedom of action, in perpetuity, to the control of any other power as to our action in the future. Perpetual peace is often declared in treaties only to be broken when just cause arises, of which every nation is the sole judge.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty contains no period for its termination. There is no time mentioned when it shall cease. There is no right or privilege given to either country to denounce it to the other country, to say, "I have gone along with this as long as I want to go, and now stop." It is strictly and purely a perpetual alliance.

Now, can it be that any alliance between this Republic and any other government in the world can be so perpetual that Congress can not stop it without incurring the penalties of a war? Mr. Frelinghuysen and Mr. Blaine and various other eminent men who have written about this subject in correspondence with Great Britain said from time to time that the circumstances have changed; and in debates in the Senate I remember distinctly well where the honorable Senator from Mississippi brought up the authorities and proved to the Senate by the great writers on international law that where the circumstances had materially changed a treaty of alliance would be abandoned at the instance of either of the parties to it. That is a principle and a part of the international law of the world.

Have not the circumstances changed, granting that the alliance,

Have not the circumstances changed, granting that the alliance, if you please, was valid in the first instance? Have we not passed into a new condition? Have not the circumstances, so far as we are concerned, become such as to force upon us the inevitable necessity of building the canal or else losing our commerce and giving it away to Great Britain?

Not only so, but when engaged in war with Spain we saw a great war ship come around from her dock on the coast of Oregron, double Cape Horn, and come around and report at Key West, in the Gulf of Mexico, for duty, and when Captain Clark, who commanded her in that magnificent voyage, splendid in the annals of naval warfare, said it did not require an hour and a half's work to put the Oregon in shape for fighting when she got to Key West, then this country woke and to another resident the contraction. then this country woke up to another point, and that was that Mr. Clayton had promised the British Government that we would never in the world make a waterway through which the Oregon could pass or any other ship that we wanted to bring home or to our coasts or any part of them for the defense of our country.

The absurdity of that proposition is quite enough to condemn it.

It is one of those things that is such an absurdity that the simplest mind can understand perfectly that such a treaty can not hold us. If it has held us for fifty years because of our timorous action or because of our desire to appear respectable among the diplomatic nations of the earth or because of some reason that I think no American really appreciates that we ought to kotow to Great Britain whenever we get a chance—if that is all so, how long is it to last? If we can not declare to-day that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is abrogated, when can we make the declaration? We can not make it until we get within the sound of Gabriel's trumpet not make it until we get within the sound of Gabriel's trumpet when he shall proclaim the dissolution of the world. There is no period of time that can be fixed by any human being for the dissolution of this treaty so long as Great Britain will simply remain silent and not notify us of her objections to its abrogation.

How are you going to remove any objection that Great Britain has to our adopting this resolution? Where will you go to find the objection? If we were to propose to pay her a hundred million or a thousand million dollars to get rid of it, she would say, "We have not charged you anything. When have we ever made up a bill of particulars or an account against you? It is not your money we are after." money we are after."

thority for the existence of that treaty, and the most that can be said for it at all is that the wise men of the United States in the Senate and in the Presidential chair from time to time have recgetting a little more reasonable. Make us a promise that for all time to come-it makes no difference what the Canadian people may want—you will never in any respect encourage or foster a disposition on the part of the Canadians to come to the United States." Is that in her proposition? What is in it? Who knows? How can a man who has a decent respect for the honor of his office afford to stand and look that basilisk in the eye and never be able to extract an answer from her as to what she wants?

There is not a man in the world who ever has stated by authority one single demand that Great Britain has made of the United States upon this question. Yet, when we want to do something for the canal we are notified of a great many objections that Great Britain is imagined to have against the project. The wisest objector is ignorant of British designs and purposes. The President of the United States is as ignorant of them to-day as I am, of far as the Separate knows. so far as the Senate knows.

If Great Britain would make a proposition to us in regard to this subject upon which we could treat with her or from which we could buy her out, then we would have some chance of action; we could buy her out, then we would have some chance of action; but so long as we permit His Imperial Majesty to stand and gaze at us in silence and make no objection we are under the shadow of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, not for another hundred years or fifty years to come, but for hundreds of years yet to come.

I could not imagine a more humiliating destiny for the United States than that we should be compelled to await the movements of Great Britain until she got ready to act hereafter in regard to this matter. Have we not suffered enough already? We describe this matter. Have we not suffered enough already? We deserve the suffering we have had, in one sense, because of the wrong we perpetrated against Costa Rica and Nicaragua when we put chains upon these States, assisting Great Britain in that unholy work. We have gone to them; they have consented that we shall have these rights, and now we are invited to abandon them.

I can see but one reason for that, and that is that the Panama scheme has not yet been fully tested and there is a prospect of making money in that direction. Hold down Nicaragua and Costa Rica and the people of the United States until we can have a longer time to traffic with M. Hutin about the matter. They have probably ten or fifteen million dollars in money there. They boast of it in the letters I will put in the RECORD addressed to the President, saying they do not want help from the United States at all.

dent, saying they do not want help from the United States at all; that they are not here for that purpose. The money is there.

We know how they have used it heretofore. We know how they have been using it during the last session of Congress in this they have been using it during the last session of Congress in this Capitol. We know that the canal company reported to the court in France—we have the record to show it—that they had spent $1,500,000 in the city of New York, where there was not one man who owned a dollar of stock. They spent it in lawyers' fees and in paying lobbyists. Twenty-five thousand dollars a year is paid to the Hon. Richard Thompson, who resigned his office as Secretary of the Navy to become a lobbyist for this canal. Here are the reports from the House of Representatives showing the whole of that transaction. I have not time to read them. It is not necessary to do it. I have put them in reports and I have put them in speeches. No one can deny the facts.

A select committee of the House of Representatives sat upon them in speeches. No one can deny the facts.

A select committee of the House of Representatives sat upon this question and made a report, and they say that Mr. Thompson resigned, and one reason he assigned for speedy action was that it would help him "to put the Nicaraguans on their backs." For that purpose he left his exalted position in the Cabinet to become a lobbyist for the Panama Canal. They have bigger men than Mr. Thompson at work for them in the United States, but they are working under water. It will be but a little time after this Congress adjourns until they will make a showing.

Some of them are in the United States, in different large cities, making speeches in favor of the Panama Canal—a job that has disgusted France, even, until she has shuddered like a sick baby at the enormity of the villainies perpetrated by her own people.

at the enormity of the villainies perpetrated by her own people. So great, indeed, were they that when Ferdinand de Lesseps, the man who built the Suez Canal and projected the sea-level canal in Panama, worn down with care and the villainies of the men he had trusted, was lying on his sick bed ready to die, his favorite son was taken by the French court and locked in the penitentiary in Paris for the crime committed in the expenditure of money in the Panama business.

It is a job that is gangrened with corruption from its beginning It is a job that is gangrened with corruption from its beginning to its end, and these men are now engaged in trying to dump it upon the United States and make us pay untold millions of dollars to get hold of a canal route that has no water supply in summer time but the fluctuating volume of the Chagres River, which for three months in the year is not a foot deep at Obispo, and will rise in a single night 32 feet. That is the source of supply for a great ship canal compared with these vast lakes, with 12,000 miles of watershed, and water enough to supply twenty canals and then have water to spare. These are the things that are in contemplation. contemplation.

Mr. President, I will state again what I said the other day in the Senate, that if my friend Mr. Hepburn had had the wit—I will not say that, for he has as much wit as any man who lives and as much common sense—but if he had had a slack place in his conscience when he was framing that bill and, instead of putting the expenditure of the $140,000,000 under the direction of the Secretary of War, had said that it should be expended by such men as the President might appoint as commissioners, thereto empowered, the bill would have passed through the Senate in a whirl. With the chance for the loot of $140,000,000 exposed to the grabbers the bill would have passed without any difficulty at all.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan]. The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 5th instant:

Resolution declaring the Clayton-Bulwer treaty abrogated.

Resolved by the Senate, That the treaty known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty between Great Britain and the United States, which was concluded on the 19th day of April, 1850, is abrogated.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, yesterday I had nearly concluded my remarks on the resolution, and what I have to say this morning will be very brief.

I wish to place in contrast in the RECORD, as a part of my re I wish to place in contrast in the Record, as a part of my remarks, some extracts from the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and from the protocol with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, so that the Senate and the country may see exactly the extent to which these documents are in conflict. I will read the précis to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, April 19, 1850, and the first article, which is as far as I need to go with that part of the treaty:

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY OF APRIL 10, 1850.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY OF APRIL 19, 1859.

The United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, being desirous of consolidating the relations of amity which so happily subsist between them, by setting forth and fixing in a convention their views and intentions with reference to any means of communication by ship canal which may be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by the way of the river San Juan de Nicaragua and either or both of the Lakes of Nicaragua or Managua, to any port or place on the Pacific Ocean, the President of the United States has conferred full powers on John M. Clayton, Secretary of State of the United States, and Her Britannic Majesty on the Right Honorable Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer, a member of Her Majesty's most honorable privy council, knight commander of the most honorable Order of the Bath, and envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Her Britannic Majesty to the United States, for the aforesaid purpose; and the said plenipotentiaries having exchanged their full powers, which were found to be in proper form, have agreed to the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

ARTICLE I.

ARTICLE I.

The Governments of the United States and Great Britain hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship canal; agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America; nor will either make use of any protection which either affords or may afford, or any alliance which either has or may have to or with any state or people, for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or of occupying, fortifying, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same; nor will the United States or Great Britain take advantage of any intimacy, or use any alliance, connection, or influence that either may possess with any state or government through whose territory the said canal may pass for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for the citizens or subjects of the one, any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal which shall not be offered on the same terms to the citizens or subjects of the other.

The remainder of the treaty contains certain specific arranges.

The remainder of the treaty contains certain specific arrangements or articles concerning commerce and navigation to be conducted through the canal, and also extending the provisions of the treaty, in a certain extent, through the whole of the Isthmus of Darien, including Tehuantepec, in Mexico, and Panama, in Colombia, passing through the States of Central America, and including all of them in some of the provisions of the treaty.

Now, Mr. President, I have read in full the clause of this treaty, Article I, which has prohibited the United States, and likewise Article I, which has prohibited the United States, and likewise Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for more than fifty years, from building a canal through that Isthmus. I will now read again the protocol of agreement entered into by President McKinley with Costa Rica and Nicaragua to show the extent to which the last agreement violates absolutely and without qualification the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua.

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Costa Rica as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near San Juan del Norte, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually engage to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plan and the agreements, in detail, found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal.

As preliminary to such future negotiations it is forthwith agreed that the course of said canal and the terminals thereof shall be the same that were stated in a treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on February 5, 1900, and now pending in the Senate of the United States for confirmation, and that the provisions of the same shall be adhered to by the United States and Costa Rica.

What I wish to say this morning about these two articles is

What I wish to say this morning about these two articles is that they are utterly irreconcilable with each other. The Government of the United States, represented in its diplomatic powers by the President, in December last made this agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica which directly violates the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. If there is a man who can show how it could possibly be that these protocols do not violate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, I should be very glad to have any suggestion on that subject from some Senator on this floor. But as long as this matter has been under discussion in the last Congress and in the present no one has ever pretended that the agreement made by Mr. Mc. What I wish to say this morning about these two articles is has been under discussion in the last Congress and in the present no one has ever pretended that the agreement made by Mr. Mc-Kinley in December last with Costa Rica and Nicaragua did not utterly violate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Now, that produces a condition here from which we have to escape in one way or another. We must retire from our agreement with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, abandon our plighted faith to those countries, in order to let the Clayton-Bulwer have another fifty or one hundred years sway in this land, or else we must adhere as a legislative body or as a diplomatic body, according to the manner in which it shall be ultimately presented to us, to this agreement made by President McKinley and sustain him in this virtuous, patriotic, and noble act.

I am for sustaining the President in his action. It was true virtuous, patriotic, and noble act.

I am for sustaining the President in his action. It was true that he had attempted to negotiate with Great Britain for the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. He had sent that negotiation to the Senate of the United States for its ratification, and he saw, evidently from the difference of opinion amongst Senators on that subject, that it would be impossible to get the Hay-Pauncefote treaty ratified as it was originally framed. Some change came over the spirit of his dream. What was it? He had made an attempt to negotiate the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and had laid that negotiation before the Senate. It was pending there. It had not been finally disposed of. But the President anticipated, doubtless, that it would be finally disposed of in such a way as that this Clayton-Bulwer treaty would be abrogated. But he did not believe that the Senate of the United States, after the action it had taken in reporting the amendments to that treaty, would recede from its attitude and would permit the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to be ratified in the form in which it came from the hands of the diplomatic authorities who concluded it by their signatures.

So he thought it was time that the President of the United States should intervene to express his views on the subject, and his views as thus expressed were that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty his views as thus expressed were that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty ought not to stand in the way of American effort to build that canal, and so far as he was concerned that it should not. So he entered upon these agreements with Costa Rica and Nicaragua and put them in this solemn form of a contract whereby he expressed his defiance of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, his disregard of its provisions, and undertook to put the Government of the United States upon the high ground that it must occupy, in order to justify itself in the opinions of the American people, that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is abrogated.

I am glad to find in the chair at this moment Mr. Money, a Senator from Mississippi, who has investigated the subject very fully, and who has expressed opinions upon it in which I fully concur, except one, which, as I understand his attitude before the concur, except one, which, as I understand his attitude before the Senate, is that we ought to pay no attention to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty even to propose its abrogation, but march forward in the high line of American duty and take our action in regard to the Nicaragua Canal as if the Clayton-Bulwer treaty had never existed. I have been willing to go further, Mr. President, and to negotiate with Great Britain for its abrogation. I have been willing to do that, not because I had any respect whatever for that treaty as a constitutional production, or as a proper limitation upon the sovereign powers of the United States, or as a proper method of treating the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica; but that merely for the sake of harmony among the nations of the earth we would resort to the ordinary forms of diplomacy in order to get an agreement from Great Britain whereby she would concern with rein the recognition that the Cleater Palmer. would concur with us in the proposition that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is abrogated.

However, the manner in which the Senate of the United States has been treated by Great Britain in respect of the amendments to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty must satisfy everyone that Great Britain does not intend to abandon what she claims to be her rights under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty to control the destiny of this canal, but she intends to insist upon them hereafter, doubtless with the view of getting from the United States other and further concessions in respect of that matter or other matters which may be convenient for her to have.

Now, just in that aspect of this case arises the question whether

Now, just in that aspect of this case arises the question whether the Senate of the United States, either as a diplomatic body or as a legislative body, is willing to have its course of duty to the United States impeded by the insistence of Great Britain upon the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in all of its terms unless we shall consent to associate with that treaty some new modification or some method of compensation in order to satisfy Great Britain in giving up her contention that it is valid and is in full force and effect against up

We have now reached that point, and it is becoming and proper, and it is the duty of the Senate as a legislative body, to declare that that treaty is not in the way of our legislating for the Nicaragua Canal. If we hesitate to-day to say that thing and on this day a year hence we do the same thing, as we would, of course, day a year hence we do the same thing, as we would, of course, because the circumstances can not be changed between now and a year hence, we may then be called upon and expected definitely to consent that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty shall hang like a pall over the country for another fifty years, and that the Senate and the House in their legislative capacity, and the Senate in its diplomatic capacity, shall be paralyzed to such an extent that they can not even raise an objection to the attitude of Great Britain.

Now, Mr. President, has it ever occurred between two great nations that one has subordinated itself completely to the other, as it is contended by some is the fact to-day in respect of our re-as it is contended by some is the fact to-day in respect of our relations with Great Britain concerning this Clayton-Bulwer treaty? Are we not in the most abject attitude if it is impossible to get the Senate of the United States to declare that the Clayton-Bulwer the Senate of the United States to declare that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is not an impediment to further legislation, thereby affirming that it shall stand until Great Britain consents that it shall be removed? That is where we stand to-day.

As I remarked yesterday, I know that the action of the Senate to-day in voting for or against this resolution can not possibly affect anything in respect of the validity or the invalidity of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as a subsisting obligation, except only that we can notify Great Britain that whether we are hereafter approached as a legislative body or as a diplomatic body we will not proached as a legislative body or as a diplomatic body we will not pay any further attention to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and that all we will ever consent to about it is a declaration, mutual if we can obtain it, that the treaty is abrogated, but a declaration that it is abrogated, although Great Britain may insist upon its continued vitality and its obligatory force upon the United States.

I do not care, Mr. President, on this occasion or at this stage of

I do not care, Mr. President, on this occasion of at this stage of the debate, if there is to be any debate about this matter, to bring forward the authorities or the precedents upon which I rely for the attitude I now hold. They are ample; they are plain. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money] who now occupies the chair has cited them heretofore in the Senate, and we all under-tend them. We know that when circumstances have changed stand them. We know that when circumstances have changed so as to make the former basis of an agreement between two nations entirely groundless, and when the facts and the circumstances have disappeared upon which a treaty was founded, particularly a treaty of alliance or coalition, it is the right of the nation that chooses to withdraw from it to do so without any offense to the other party.

I took occasion yesterday to allude to the fact that in many treaties we have made, especially in treaties of peace, there is a solemn covenant entered into between the governments, which the Almighty God is called upon to witness, that thereafter there shall be perpetual peace between the two countries. Has anybody ever supposed that such an agreement in a treaty could deprive either of the governments of the right to go to war with the other upon some new ground of offense? Such covenants are made only to be broken by the subsequent conduct of the parties concerned when just occasion arises.

Now, in respect of the subsequent conduct of Great Britain under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, I will not go over that long, his-toric series of discussions, statements, and utterances by our dip-lomatic authorities and by Presidents of the United States to show that Great Britain has from the beginning disregarded the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in its essential elements of agreement. It is not necessary to do that. Many of these questions have settled is not necessary to do that. Many of these questions have settled themselves in a way that we are not perhaps now concerned at all in disturbing in order to change the situation which they have created. I refer now particularly to the establishment of British authority in the different States of Central America and in the islands adjacent thereto, whereby Crown colonies and other colonies have been established in contravention of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. These matters have passed into history, and this country perhaps is not vitally concerned in trying to change a situation which has been the outgrowth of various transactions since the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was first ratified.

which has been the outgrowth of various transactions since the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was first ratified.

Now, it is to be observed that since that treaty was ratified there has never grown up a contest between the two Governments as to the canal rights and privileges which are dealt with under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Until the discussions upon the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, we never had a disagreement or any correspondence with Great Britain upon any question relating to our canal rights in the Isthmus. The questions we have discussed related entirely to her rights of sovereignty and control of certain related entirely to her rights of sovereignty and control of certain States that she contended were excepted from the operations of that treaty and that we contended were included in it; but our canal treaty and that we contended were included in it; but our canal rights were not dealt with until we reached the Hay-Pauncefote negotiations. During all the period of our legislation upon this subject, which has now extended over twenty-six years, Great Britain has never made an objection to anything that we proposed to do. We have passed bill after bill and made reports after reports from the highest committees of the Senate and of the House, all of them claiming the right of the Government of the United States to aid canals through Nicaragua and Costa Rica with money, and to take over all of the stock of the companies that held concessions. When we came, however, to the Haywith money, and to take over all of the stock of the companies that held concessions. When we came, however, to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, we there insisted upon our right to have the exclusive control of the construction, ownership, and management of a canal to be built by the Government of the United States out of the moneys supplied from the Treasury, and that was the first time that that proposition went into controversy, or rather into negotiation, between the United States and Great Britain.

We sought to disclaim the power of that treaty under the changed conditions that have come upon this Western Hemisphere, commercial, military, geographical, and political; we sought to change that treaty so that all objections that might arise out of it should be removed and so that it should not stand in our way when we assumed we had the right, notwithstanding that treaty, to build, own, control, and manage that canal exclusively. Great Britain seems not to have resisted that right. She sought merely to qualify its application to the case in hand. She did not then set up any outstanding claim of compensation that she was to receive in other directions or other quarters; she made no pretension of any right to load some other foreign question upon that negotiation. She merely presented a question arising out of the gotiation. She merely presented a question arising out of the treaty of Constantinople of 1888 as to the manner in which that canal should be conducted with reference to its neutrality for the advantage and benefit of all the nations of the earth.

We came to an agreement with her about that, not because she had the right to impose it upon us under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, but because it was right in itself. We desired to have that great gateway between the oceans controlled by the same agreement that had been arranged between all the great powers of Europe in respect of the Suez Canal, so that a vessel passing around the globe should find the same law of neutrality, the same protection, and all the incidents that are arranged by the treaty of Constantinople applied to and in full force in the canal through Nicaragua. That was all that was done, and our interests and our wishes alike inclined us to accept the proposal.

Now, let us look at the moral attitude of the two Governments, if you please. We agreed—and the Senate in the ratification of that treats did not take acceptance to the take the content of the treats.

Now, let us look at the moral attitude of the two Governments, if you please. We agreed—and the Senate in the ratification of that treaty did not take exception to that agreement—that the principles of the Constantinople treaty of 1888 should apply to the Nicaragua Canal. The question of the fortification of that canal was greatly discussed. Eminent military men were consulted, both of the Navy and of the Army, for the purpose of ascertaining just what bearing this question of fortification had upon the occupancy and exclusive control of it by the United States, and the Senate by a two thirds vote came to an agreement upon that subject subject.

They came to exactly the same agreement that Mr. McKinley put into the protocols which he concluded with Costa Rica and Nicaragua-precisely the same. Costa Rica and Nicaragua de-Nicaragua—precisely the same. Costa Rica and Nicaragua demanded that they should have the protection of all the nations of the earth for that canal for its neutrality, its innocent use, and its peaceful conduct. They desired that that area occupied by the canal and by the waters of the sea adjacent to it should become a place sacred to peace, and that under no circumstances should that canal be made a theater of war or an instrumentality of war-like overstions. like operations.

Who can not see and understand that desire on the part of small States like Costa Rica and Nicaragua, neither of which could build or purchase a ship of war—a great battle ship? If you taxed their people to the utmost of endurance, they could not get money enough into their treasury to get a battle ship for each of them, or perhaps for both together, to defend their coast and the entrances to that canal.

The canal is to run right through the heart of Nicaragua. Fifteen miles away from the Pacific coast it will widen out, after it has been constructed, into a vast lake 100 miles long and 45 miles wide. With such a body of water as that in the heart of Nicaragua occupied by the fleets of foreign nations in their passage to and fro from the Pacific to the Atlantic, those little States saw that they would be perfectly at the mercy of any government that chose, after it had gotten into the canal, or even while getting into it, to take possession of that lake, and, consequently, command the entire States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. They were very wise in insisting upon the neutrality of that canal as it was provided for by the great powers of Europe in respect of the Suez Canal.

It was their safety; it was their life; it was their only hope of preserving their sovereignty that they should insist that all the nations of the earth should contribute through their will and might and public opinion to the protection of that canal against all acts of hostility to be committed within it or about it. So the President of the United States, consulting, as it was his duty to do, those States that owned the country through which the canal was to pass, conceded to them what was enacted in that great act called the treaty of Constantinople, and, beginning there and making that concession to them in the terms of the agreement which he made with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, he deferred the subject as to the remainder of the negotiations until some future time, but expressed all the elementary and necessary parts of this agreement so far as the location of the canal was concerned and its capacity for accommodating ships of the largest class.

That was a wise and humane arrangement; it was a just arrangement; it was such a one as Nicaragua and Costa Rica had a right to insist upon; and they felt perfectly secure in the fact that they would be better protected by it than they would be by any amount of fortifications that could be put up by the United States or by either of those States. They would be unable to man them. If we had been permitted to build those fortifications, we should have to go there with an army and a navy and continue there forever to protect that canal. It would be a useless expenditure of money, and a very dangerous attitude even for the United States to hold toward Costa Rica and Nicaragua. We could not even trust ourselves under the temptations to aggression against even trust ourselves under the temptations to aggression against the independence of these Republics that would arise, in the course of events, from our military occupancy of fortresses that they could have no ability to resist.

We owed this self-denial as a debt of national honor and duty toward these small States.

Having made this agreement, wise in its terms, honest, sincere, and just, are we to abandon it? Is the course of the legislative action of the Senate of the United States still so obstructed by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty that we dare not advance one step in the direction of carrying out this agreement with Costa Rica and Nicaragua? That is the question that is before the Senate. The Clayton-Bulwer treaty has disappeared as the subject of negotiation, and what is asserted here is simply this, that it is abrogated; not by any act of ours, not by any specific act of anybody, but that it has fallen into desuetude; it has lapsed; it has gone into such a condition that it no longer remains a barrier to the action of the Congress of the United States.

The President found it no barrier in his way. He made that agreement which I have just read to the Senate, and it struck down every word that is in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty that can possibly stand in the way of that agreement. What difficulty do we find now in sustaining that action on the part of the Presi-Shall the Senate of the United States as a legislative body still halt and hesitate after the President has taken this great advance step and planted his feet firmly upon the ground that he ought to have occupied, or that Presidents ought to have occupied, many years ago? Are we going to desert the President of the United States in this agreement because we are still afraid of giving offense to Great Britain?

Now, let Great Britain come forward with her propositions, whatever they may be; her objections, whatever they are; and state them to our diplomatic authorities, and let us consider them. But, so far as we are concerned, we ought to do exactly what the President has done—proceed to deal with Nicaragua and Costa Rica in the manner provided for in this agreement, which is just and right. Our line of duty is plain and imperative.

What objection can Great Britain have to our stipulating with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, as has been done in these agreements, in regard to the neutrality and the nonfortification of that canal and its uses in time of war and in time of peace? She herself has agreed with the United States in a solemn covenant that all these things were right and just. Her objection to this treaty can not rest upon the ground that there was something in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that she did not approve, for she signed the treaty and sent it to the Senate of the United States, through our President, for our ratification with all those terms in it. So that the moral attitude of the Governments of the United States, Costa Rica, and Nicaragua upon this subject coincides precisely with what Great Britain put into the body of the Hay-Pauncefote

We can not violate any British instinct or sentiment or attitude by taking the ground the President has taken here in reference to the Hor Papperfote treaty or the principles inby taking the ground the Freshent has taken here in reference to the propriety of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or the principles in-cluded in it. So there is no reason why we should not act and express our opinion upon this subject. It is useless for the Presi-dent of the United States to make any further agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica in the interval between now and next December if the Clayton-Bulwer treaty can stand here to prohibit even any negotiation on the subject of getting exclusive rights and privileges there. The British attitude to-day, if we understand it at all—and I admit that we have to gather it entirely from her silence—is that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is still in full force and effect to deprive us of the right as a sovereign power to make the agreements which the President has made with Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

That is the attitude we are in to-day. Those who set up British opinion, British sentiment, the British attitude, or the expectation of what Great Britain will do against any action on the part of the Senate of the United States or the House of Representatives, either in a legislative or in a diplomatic capacity, to proceed with the work of constructing the canal, if they succeed in their con-tention, bar the President out from entering into any negotiation like this with Costa Rica and Nicaragua or from completing the present negotiation by their refusal to declare that, in their opinion, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty does not stand in the way of the exercise of his authority. He has exercised it, and he has put it into an agreement, signed it, sealed it, and delivered it. Shall we revoke it by our silence as Great Britain has destroyed the Hay-

Now, why should we refuse to inform the President that he has the right to proceed in that direction, that his action was not contrary to any existing and vital treaty between the United States and Great Britain, that his action was in conformity to the Amer-ican will and is necessary for the American people? The whole question is resolved, Mr. President, by the simple inquiry, What is the President of the United States to do between this and next December to advance the canal? What can he do, except to pro-ceed to execute these protocols and to finish up the details of negotiation, a part of which is already established and is to take effect forthwith? Unless this is done we shall come back here next December without an advance step having been taken, either to get rid of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty or to confirm, elaborate, establish, and conclude our rights under our existing agreements with Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

I want the attitude of the Senate understood by the President of the United States, so that he will feel at liberty to proceed to complete the contracts with Costa Rica and Nicaragua. Without those contracts or some similar contracts we never can acquire from Nicaragua and Costa Rica the right to build a canal through that country, unless we go down there and whip them out of their countries and take possession as a sovereign. I hope there is nobody in this Chamber who desires to do that. I have heard hints that such a thing was possible, and even that it might be desirable; but, Mr. President, there can come upon the United States no stigma in the future that would be so black as that we will inflict upon ourselves if we go to those little Republics that we ourselves have almost created and have pleged ourselves to protect against all foreign countries, and, with arms in our hands, demand of them canal rights which they would be compelled under duress to surrender. I do not want to be put in an attitude of that kind, and for one I will never consent to it. Nicaragua and Costa Rica have a right to a free hand in this matter. We have kept them bound now for a half century so that they did not dare to make a proposition to any other nation in the world to furnish them with money to build their own canal. There has not been a time for many years, to say the least, in which either Great Britain or the United States would have consented that Costa Rica and Nicaragua should borrow money from some foreign country, mortgaging the canal for its security, and go forward and construct that work. Why? Because these two Governments, that had not one foot of land in Nicaragua or Costa Rica, that had no material rights there, no sovereign rights, no hica, that had no material rights there, no sovereigh rights, no pledges or contracts with either of these States, have stood by and have resolved between themselves that neither of them should acquire the control of the canal in Nicaragua; which means that neither of them should build it with Government money; and of course if they would not do it themselves and kept each other by contract from doing this thing, in perpetuity, they would naturally and necessarily prevent other nations from doing it.

So that under these conditions we have really destroyed the sovereign powers of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, in order to make those countries perfectly subservient to the will of these two great and powerful Governments—Great Britain and the United States.

The President of the United States has gone forward to a higher

The President of the United States has gone forward to a higher line of duty; he has broken these bonds; he has dissipated this obstruction; he has destroyed this agreement between the United States and Great Britain which prevented and prohibited us from doing such a thing, and has made these solemn contracts; and what I am trying to do here to-day is to get the Senate to consent that it is right. That is all.

I suppose that it is possible that a motion will be made to lay this resolution on the table; it is also possible that a motion will be made to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If a motion is made to lay the resolution on the table, the vote will indicate moon that motion whether we are willing still to live under dicate upon that motion whether we are willing still to live under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty or whether we are willing to proceed to do our duty to our country, and let Great Britain come up with her objections, and state them, so that we can act upon them.

Upon that motion to lay on the table, if that motion should be made, or the motion to refer to the Committee on Foreign Relations, if that motion should be made, the vote will indicate a certain attitude in this Chamber in respect to the canal which will admonish the President of the United States either that he will be sustained or that he will not be sustained, in making further overtures to Great Britain, whereby some additional concessions are to be made to that Government-whatever they may be I do not know—or some compensation provided out of the Treasury of the United States, or otherwise, for her yielding up a right which the President has denied that she possesses. Then Great Britain and the United States will both see from that vote whether or not there is a two-thirds majority in this Senate in favor of living always under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as a subsisting obligation, or whether there is less than a two-thirds majority here to support that subordination. If it is developed here that there is not a two-thirds majority in favor of continuing under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and submitting to it indefinitely in the future, then, Mr. President, there will be no further negotiation on this question. the question will remain whether we will still continue to live under the silent opposition of Great Britain, or whether we shall compel her in a proper way—through legislation—that she shall state her objections to the attitude of the Government of the United States.

On the motion, if it shall be made, to refer to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I read on yesterday, in the remarks I then had the honor to submit to the Senate, the action of that committee upon this question when that committee decided—negatively, it is true, but authentically—that the Government of Great Britain had the right to interfere and to prevent us from legislating on this question, and that that right was derived from either of two sources—the pendency of the amendments to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, to be subject to her acceptance, and the other is the existence of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. True, that was decided by a party vote, and I regretted very sincerely that we were divided in that way upon a question like that. So it was, and so it will be if carried back again. That committee has made up its mind that there shall not be any legislation by Congress upon the subject of the canal until Great Britain sees proper to withdraw the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, or until, by making to her some new compensation or new concession, we can buy her consent that we shall proceed. It is useless to send the resolution to that committee. It will sleep there during the vacation of Congress, upon this question when that committee decided-negatively, it committee. It will sleep there during the vacation of Congress, until next December, before any report will be reached.

In that period of time, Mr. President, what is going to happen in this country? One thing will happen to a certainty, and that is that all action on the part of the diplomatic functionaries of the United States in respect to this carel will care. We will come United States in respect to this canal will cease. We will come back here next December in precisely the same attitude that we We will come are now, and by that time the Panama Canal Company, or some other organization, will probably have arranged so as to realize what I quoted yesterday from the letter of General Hains. I did not quote that letter literally, not having it before me; but I have it now. General Hains is a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and, with the remainder of them, without any dissent in that commission, has reported in favor of the Nicaraguan route.

He says:

I am sorry something could not be done for the canal. A year hence other circumstances may not be so favorable.

That is a prediction, Mr. President, that any man could safely That is a prediction, Mr. President, that any man could safely make to-day—that the circumstances will not be so favorable next December as they are now; and by refusing to-day to act upon this resolution, and to act favorably upon it, in my opinion we realize in advance another delay, not of a year merely, but of many, many years; and the friends of this canal, who are legion, who are the great mass of the people of the United States, will have to stand by and see their fondest hopes for its construction vanish, while the enemies of the canal—the Panama Canal Company and the nine railroads, the transcontinental railroads, that have combined together for the purpose of preventing it from ever being built—will triumph over the people.

I have been working for this canal, Mr. President, for the good of the country at large, and I am yet; but I have a motive for working for it in addition to the good of the country at large, which I think will be accepted by the generosity, at least, of the gentlemen in this Chamber as being a justifiable motive. I live in a country that was covered up with the ashes of desolation by the civil war, and we have been laboring with might and main to bring our country forward and to relieve it from that condition. bring our country forward and to relieve it from that condition. While political agencies have been at war with us continually, we have not had any struggle in that direction that has amounted to a great deal in repressing our efforts. We have been growing more and more reconciled to our situation in the American Union, although it is one of imbecility, almost, in a great minority, and deeply painful under any condition; but I have desired that an opportunity should be given to the people of the Southern States to engage in commerce with the whole world, and to use their peculiar crop of cotton, and I might say their peculiar crop also of the cheapest iron and steel and coal in the world, and their peculiar crop of yellow-pine timber, which belongs nowhere else except in the South on this hemisphere or in the world, to enlarge our commercial power and to attempt to accumulate semething that will restore the fortunes of the young people to the position that they would have attained if this great struggle had not oc-

The old men and women are rapidly seeking their homes in the dust. They are rapidly escaping from impoverishment, hardship, and many evils to which they were unaccustomed. They are going, as many of them will go, perhaps the great majority, to a better land than this. While I stay here and linger upon this soil, identified as I have been by my birth, by my rearing, by the sentiments of my soul with the people of the South, I have felt that I owed them this last and hardest labor of my life. I have tried my best to get the assistance of Congress to uncover the people and their institutions from this burden of ashes and ruin. ple and their institutions from this burden of ashes and ruin. may fail in this; perhaps I will; I think I will; but the great battle for the canal has been fought and won. I think I shall not live now to see a canal completed. That makes no difference. I have contributed in some form, to the best of my ability, to bringing forward the facts, the reasons, the arguments which make it necessary that the canal should be built as a commercial enterprise for the benefit of every man, woman, and child in the Union, as an indispensable part of the security of our country, and also to cement the Union which now includes the borders of the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans and some of the islands of the Pacific. There is a great barrier of mountains between the East and the West, and on the other side of those mountains and on this side west, and on the other side of those mountains and on this side there is great diversity of interests. It may turn out that cir-cumstances like those after a while will cause a weakening of the bond even of the Union, and that men will find their interest on the Pacific slope to be more particularly identified with the Pacific Ocean and its control, and in the agitations of political affairs we may find hereafter that similar strife will arise between the East the West that hitherto has existed between the North and and the West that hitherto has existed between the North and the South. God knows I do not wish such an occurrence should ever take place; I desire anything more than that; but I can see very well, I think, how men following their own interests and their own ambitions may grow cold, indifferent, or even hostile to each other in the conflicts of commerce; and there is no bond that can be constructed which will bind the Pacific coast and the Atlantic coast together like the Nicaragua Canal. There is no other bond like it bond like it.

So in every attitude of this question, Mr. President, I can see nothing in it but good to the United States—not good only, but supreme triumph in commercial success. If we build the canal, will transfer to New York the clearing house of the commerce of the world, for the same reason that the clearing house has been heretofore established at Liverpool, the reason being that New York, when that canal is built, will be nearer to the great marts of trade on all the coasts of the Pacific and South Atlantic oceans than Liverpool is, and it will be backed up by the enterprise of our people; by the evident security of this Government, which has stood the greatest trial that any government in this world has ever stood in the war of 1861–1865; it will be backed by the freedom of trade between the States; by the encouragement of trade between the United States and other countries; by the fact that we are in trade between the States; by the encouragement of trade between the United States and other countries; by the fact that we are in such a condition of political association that we are as one man for the glory and the honor of the United States; and by the further fact that in the event of an attack by a foreign country against the United States at any port that can be named we can land a million men at that port inside of ten days.

These considerations, Mr. President, will satisfy investors, will satisfy the men who through the medium of bonds and securities desire to make entailments of property upon their children, and great corporations that depend for their perpetuity upon the existence of their bonded obligations more than anything else—these considerations will satisfy the moneyed men of the earth that the United States is a country that is safe for investment and safe for United States is a country that is safe for investment and safe for the use of capital in all classes of industry; and the shorter length of the line between New York and all the cities of the Pacific Ocean will satisfy all commercial men that New York is to be and will be the real commercial center of the world. That anticipation of our future power and success has led me to struggle for this canal against all manner of opposition.

The secret, rubber-shod lobbyist who traverses these corridors, the men who are employed by the railroad companies to come here with unlimited supplies of money, the political combinations of men in different parts of the Union, and perhaps, above all, the hope of the men who loot the Government and the people on such occasions that they will have a chance in some of the occurrences that may attend this transaction to handle the large masses of the money that is necessary to build the canal—these are all in combination against the project, and it would look to be a hopelest task to undertake to accomplish anything further in regard to the canal. But no power can break down the purpose of the people to construct this canal. We have no present duty except to notify canal. But no power can break down the purpose of the people to construct this canal. We have no present duty except to notify the President and Great Britain that hereafter it will be utterly needless that anybody should come forward with a proposition to put an end to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, if it includes any compensation to Great Britain or any new inducement to her that she might yield up a right that she has long since apparently abandonad doned,

Has Great Britain abandoned her claims to interfere and prevent the United States from exercising her sovereign power to make a treaty or a contract with Nicaragua and Costa Rica? So far as the record shows, she has. Yet she does not speak, and in her silence, which seems to us to be more portentous than the strongest action she could take, it is not only our privilege, but it is our duty as a legislative body to go forward and construct the canal canal.

Mr. President, I have said all I desire to say on this occasion. do not know whether or not this matter will be debated. I do not anticipate any particular motion in regard to it; but I ask those here who are the friends of the canal in this body to indicate to-day whether it is necessary to stop legislation or to stop action in favor of the canal, or whether we shall go ahead and discharge our duty to the people of the United States.

I will insert as appendixes to my remarks the papers to which allusion has been made.

APPENDIX A.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Through the request of the President on the one hand, and of the House of Representatives on the other hand, questions relating to the power and duty of the Senate are now, apparently, forced upon the consideration of the Senate that arise out of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which was ratified by the Senate on the 4th of July, 1850.

The President invokes the treaty-making power, and the House of Representatives requests the exercise of the legislative powers of the Senate, both substantially for the same purpose.

The negotiation with Great Britain of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to remove certain difficulties that have grown out of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the passage of House bill No. 2538, which is alleged to have the same effect, furnish the occasion for this dual resort to the powers of the Senate for the purpose of accomplishing the wish of the people for the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific occass.

While these requests are not necessarily in conflict, they each present the question whether the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is obligatory upon Congress, so as to control its duty, or to limit its powers in the enactment of the House bill No. 2538, now pending in the Senate.

The House bill makes no reference in terms to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, or to the Hay-Pauncefote negotiation, nor is it in necessary conflict with any provision of either treaty. It leaves all diplomatic questions that exist or that may arise to the disposal of the rightful authorities of our Government.

It does not assert or deny that such disposal of the canal question must accord with the policy of the United States, as declared in its laws, but such an assertion would be superfluous, because that measure declares a public policy on the subject of the canal and provides the means for its enforcement.

The bill proposes to accomplish this through the paramount power of the legislative department, which stands above all exists.

The Hay-Pauncefote negotiation does not, in terms, admit or assume that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is, in fact, an obstruction to the exercise by Congress of the powers on which the House bill rests. It assumes, properly, that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty has received the solemn sanction of the treaty-making power of the United States, and that no effectual measures have been adopted by either of the treaty powers to terminate it. It does not assume that Congress is wanting in power to terminate that treaty, or is embarrassed by any just consideration of comity or public duty in declaring it does assume according to the fact, that difficulties have arien between the treaty powers as to the interpretation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and as to the effect of various transactions which have a temodet the efforts to an agreement for remove those difficulties and doubts so har as they relate to any istemina causin in Nicaragna and Costa Rika, or elsewhere, early, as a naccording to the state of the control of the c

Britain and Venezuela, all of the features of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty have passed into the category of settled disputes, except those that relate to a canal through Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

Of these unsettled contentions, the first is the right of either party to that treaty to acquire or to exercise, directly or indirectly, the exclusive ownership or control over the canal; and the other is the right to fortify the canal or the country in its vicinity, so as to exert the powers of military command over it.

Such agreements are not broken within the contemplation of the laws of nations when either power is compelled by the duty of national self-defense to disregard such stipulations. Incidental to these provisions is the agreement as to the neutrality of the canal, which is not a joint stipulation, and is left open as to the area to be included in the agreement for further treaty arrangement.

These points are proposed to be settled by the Hay-Pauncefote negotiation in a manner that is nearly conformable to the treaty of Constantinople of 1888, relating to the Suez Canal.

If the House bill is enacted as a law, it would not hinder or embarrass us in the least as to concluding that negotiation. If it did, however, it would only be done through the interposition of the paramount assertion of the sovereign political power of the United States to control the inferior powers of the President and the Senate, and this we can not refuse to assert.

As to the wisdom and expediency of the Hay-Pauncefote negotiation, which has been disaffirmed by the report of the Committee of Foreign Relations and is still under consideration by the Senate, this committee does not express any opinion.

As to the wisdom and expediency of the IBay Panneroto engotiation, which has been disaffirmed by the report of the Committee of Foreign Relations and is still under consideration by the Senate, this committee does not express any opinion.

It deals only with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as a supposed impediment to the proper freedom of action on the part of Congress, and recommends that the Senate, acting in its legislative capacity, will declare that it is abrogated. The committee reach this conclusion through several different propositions of law, based upon the undisputed facts that have been under discussion by our diplomatic representatives for nearly fifty years.

It is asserted by some of the committee that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as to the parts that remain unexecuted, is a treaty of alliance, without any limit as to the period of its existence, and is therefore open to be terminated by either party at its option. That it is an alliance for the protection of territory that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is foreign to both the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is a second to the contracting parties, and involves the use of many that is a second to the contracting parties, and in the parties of the committee and the contracting parties and the contracting the contr

SIR: The new Panama Canal Company has never proposed and does not seek any appropriation or financial aid from the Government of the United States in the completion of its canal.

It places its canal works on the Isthmus of Panama subject to the examination of this Government, or any special commission through whom it may be desired to make such examination, and will facilitate in every possible way any such desire of the Government.

The Government will find that fully two-fifths of the canal works are already constructed; that continuously during the past four years from 3,000 to 4,000 men, under a large force of engineers, have been and are now actually engaged upon its works; that all technical and physical problems have been solved by the eminent international engineering commission, whose report of November 18 last is before you; that the canal is undoubtedly feasible, and the harbors at both ends natural harbors and entirely satisfactory; that its concessions are perfect and unquestioned, and that the relations of the United States to the canal are especial and superior by reason of the "special and remarkable advantages" secured to it by the treaty of 1846 between the United States and Colombia, and which rights, whatever they may be, were scrupulously respected, observed, and confirmed in the concessions of Colombia.

bia to the Panama Canal Company, under which the canal is being com-bia to the Panama Canal Company, under which the canal is being completed.

While the new Panama Company does not seek any financial aid from the Government, it recognizes the national sentiment in favor of acquiring some pecuniary interest in any canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. Therefore, the new Panama Canal Company declares that if, as the result of any such investigation, the Government of the United States adopts the Panama route, the company, if the Government so desires, will reincorporate under the laws of the State of New York (under the laws of which State the Panama Railroad Company has existed for nearly fifty years), or of some other State of the Union, subject to the provisions of its concession, and vest its concessions and property in such corporation. It will also, in said event, accord to the United States such representation in its board of directors, and such opportunity to acquire an interest in its securities as may be permitted by its concessions, which, of course, must be scrupulously observed.

And further, if the United States should desire to perpetuate or enlarge its existing rights and privileges, acquired under said treaty of 1848, the company will conform to such supplemental treaty as may be entered into between the United States and Colombia.

We beg leave to say that yesterday, at a public hearing accorded to us by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, we submitted to the chairman and gentlemen of that committee a communication to the foregoing purport, and have the honor to be,

Your obedient servants,

Director-General of New Panama Canal Company.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What disposition does the Senator from Alabama wish to have made of the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, until disposed of, prevents any further action in this body. The motion to go into executive session has precedence over action on any measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate now proceed to the election of a Pres ${\bf d}$ ant of the nate pro tempore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and unanimously agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected William P. Frye, a Senator from the State of Maine, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice-President from time to time, during the pleasure of the Senate, in accordance with the terms of its resolution passed March 12, 1890.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that a committee of two Senators be appointed to inform Senator Frye of his election as President proteurpore.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed

Mr. Allison and Mr. Morgan as the committee.

Mr. Frye entered the Chamber, and was escorted to the VicePresident's chair by Mr. Allison and Mr. Morgan. Upon taking the chair as President pro tempore, Mr. Frye said: Senators, my cup is full and running over. The expressions of your confidence which I have received within the last few days make me supremely happy and obliged to you. I am overwhelmed by them, and have nothing more to say. Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 48 minutes .m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 8, 1901, at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 8, 1901.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. Sundry messages in writing from the President were communicated to the Senate by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

INSIGNIA OF OFFICERS IN THE NA

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, which will be

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 7, 1901.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 1, 1901.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if commissioned officers in the naval service promoted from the ranks are in any respect debarred the use of the uniform and other privileges of commissioned officers of the Navy; whether there is any distinction in the insignia of office of such officers and the officers graduates of the Naval Academy, and if so, why, and what steps are being taken, if any, to permit this class of officers to wear the regular insignia and uniform of the naval officers graduated at the Naval Academy.

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

In reply the Department begs leave to state that commissioned officers in the naval service promoted from the ranks are not debarred from privileges enjoyed by other commissioned officers of the Navy, but that they are not given the use of some uniform used by certain other commissioned officers of the Navy, just as the latter in one grade or corps are not given the same uniform as others of them in another grade or corps. There is a distinction between the insignia of office of officers promoted from the ranks and of officers who have graduated from the Naval Academy, just as there are distinctions in the insignia of the latter officers, as, for instance between a lieutenant and a civil engineer, because such distinction is necessary to indicate the grade of the service to which these officers belong by reason of their duties and their rank. The distinction does not arise from the question of whether the officer was promoted from the ranks or is a graduate of the Naval Academy.

The Department has in preparation and will issue about May 1 a uniform regulation book, showing all uniforms and permitting officers promoted from the ranks to wear certain insignia and uniform not now worn by them, but which are permitted for other commissioned officers.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Mr. HOAR. I offer a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts of-fers a resolution and asks for its immediate consideration. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee to consist of two Senators be appointed by the Char to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, unless he may have some further communication to make, the Senate is ready to adjourn without day.

Mr. MORGAN. I must object to the resolution, and I will state my reason.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama objects. Mr. MORGAN. A Senator-elect will be here to-morrow, Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, for the purpose of being sworn in to this body, and it is due to him that we shall not adjourn to-day, inasmuch as we have to morrow and can remain here and complete the organization of the Senate. I hope the Senator from Massa-chusetts will not insist upon the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I will not undertake to raise the question whether a resolution pertaining to adjournment is a fair exception to the general rule. I do not object to the resolution going over if any Senator desires that that course shall be taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution goes over

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the consent of the Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Fresident, I wish to ask the consent of the Senate, and to make a brief statement before I present the request. The Senator from Oregon, Hon. Mr. McBride, who has just retired from this body, was a member of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and a very highly valued member of that committee. His successor, Mr. MITCHELL, who has just been sworn in, has been a long time familiar with that subject and perhaps has already as which states to it as any person in this country. Inserting given as much study to it as any person in this country. Inasmuch as the vacancy exists, which ought to be filled, for reasons that I need not now state to the Senate, I thought I would ask the Senate that by unanimous consent Mr. MITCHELL might be put upon that committee as a member, vice Mr. McBride, who has retired from the Senate.

I wish to say just one word more. I do not know of any arrangement which has been made about the committees, and I do not propose to interfere with any arrangement that is made or any that is likely to be made. I merely make this an exceptional case on account of the peculiarity of the circumstances.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that Mr. MITCHELL be placed upon the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the vacancy upon the Committee on Interoceanic Canals be filled by the appointment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. Is there objection? The Chair hears were and the vacancy is so filled.

one, and the vacancy is so filled.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, for very obvious reasons no one objected to the request of the Senator from Alabama, but I feel bound to say that the repetition of such a request from a single Senator, without consultation with either side of the Chamber, would give rise to great inconvenience, and if another such request be made from any quarter I shall feel bound to object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The presentation of petitions and

PETITIONS.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington presented the petition of E. F. Knight and sundry other citizens of Vancouver, Wash., and the petition of W. J. Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the New Hebrides and other islands of the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THOMAS G. GARRETT.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the sum of $300 be paid by the Secretary of the Senate to Thomas G. Garrett, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, for compiling the debates in the House of Representatives and the Senate, the reports of committees, and other papers and documents, at the request of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] on the 6th instant, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby directed to investigate and report to the Senate the system of taxation in vogue in the District of Columbia and whether any portion of the tax laws contained in the organic act for said District is inoperative by reason of defective legislation; and also what changes, if any, should be made in existing law in order to secure an equitable adjustment of the burdens of taxation. For this purpose the committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, and to sit during the recess of Congress. The necessary expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Congress," in line 10, strike out the remainder of the resolution, in the following words:

The necessary expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I dislike to object, but this is a very grave question that the Senator from Michigan is opening here. ing here. In the absence of an extra session, it will be next December before we are here together again. I have been in years cember before we are here together again. I have been in years past identified with the form of government of this District and with the system of taxation under which the people of the District now live. I do not think this inquiry ought to be undertaken in front of an eight months' vacation. I think the Senate should be here when the inquiry is in progress. It involves too much to the people of the District not to be carefully guarded. While I have every confidence in the capacity and the purpose of the District Committee, I am forced, for the reason stated, to object to going into this work. into this work

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. HOAR. It is in order, is it not?
Mr. McMILLAN. I have just reported it from the committee.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

LIEUT. COL. H. O. S. HEISTAND.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs have leave to sit during the coming recess of Congress and to make the investigation ordered by Senate resolution No. 583, agreed to during the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, and to act by full committee or subcommittee, and to administer oaths by subcommittee, and summon witnesses, and send for persons and

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 2, 1901.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress commenced

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. WILLIAM P. FRYE, a Senator from the State of Maine) took the chair and called the Senate

Rev. W. H. Milburn, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer: God of our fathers, Thy servants of this Chamber are come to-God of our fathers, Thy servants of this Chamber are come together for the opening of the Fifty-seventh Congress with kindly feelings each for the other, and impressed with the sense of duty as their tasks are opening before them. And yet there comes to us the oppressive sense of an unspeakable loss, the departure of our friend and brother, our father and the chief of the nation, by the hand of the assassin. O Lord God, let Thy pity and grace come to all the people of this land by reason of this unspeakable calamity. And as Thy servant, the widow, sits alone and bereft, may Thy comfort and consolation come to her.

And grant, O Lord, that we may duly feel the loss and sorrow attendant upon the departure from earth of a member of this body, a Senator from South Dakota.

Hear our devout prayers in behalf of Thy servant, the senior Senator from New Jersey, and grant that the means which are used for his recovery to health may be blessed by Thee, and may he come to his place upon this floor again crowned with Thy loving kindness.

Grant Thy grace to every member of this body, and to all who are dear to them, and so may the light and favor of God, our Father, be with us all, now and evermore. Amen.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to announce that my colleague] Mr. SEWELL] is detained on account of illness..

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum of the Senate present, and the Senate is prepared for the transaction of business.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. ALLISON presented the credentials of Charles H. Dietrich, chosen by the legislature of the State of Nebraska a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy in the term ending March 3, 1905; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. ALLISON presented the credentials of Joseph H. Millard, chosen by the legislature of the State of Nebraska a Senator from that State for the town ending March 3, 1907; which were read that State for the term ending March 3, 1907; which were read.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the term read again for which the Senator-elect was chosen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause referred to will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the term of six years beginning on the 28th day of March, 1901.

Mr. BURROWS. That will not do.
Mr. HOAR. There seems to be a defect in those credentials.
Mr. SPOONER. Is it anything more than a conclusion of law?
Mr. HOAR. I suppose it is not for the Senate to debate the matter until some one makes a claim under the credentials, but it is the custom of the Senate when credentials are presented to have anything which may occur to a Senator pointed out, so that it may be corrected. It would seem a little remarkable that a legislature should elect a Senator for a fixed term extending beyond their power to elect, and to say that that is a mere conclusion of law. Still I will not go into a discussion of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the certificate of election will be placed on file.

Mr. GAMBLE presented the credentials of A. B. Kittredge, appointed by the governor of the State of South Dakota a Senator from that State to fill until the next meeting of the legislature from that State, to fill, until the next meeting of the legislature thereof, the vacancy caused by the death of JAMES H. KYLE, in the term ending March 3, 1903; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. CLARK of Montana presented the credentials of Paris Gibson, chosen by the legislature of the State of Montana a Senator from that State, to fill the vacancy in the term ending March 3, 1905; which were read and ordered to be filed.

SWEARING IN OF SENATORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senators whose credentials have been read will present themselves at the desk, the required oath of office will be administered to them.

Mr. Dietrich, Mr. Gibson, Mr. Kittredge, and Mr. Millard were escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. Spooner, Mr. Clark of Montana, Mr. Gamble, and Mr. Hanna, respectively, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think it is the universal etiquette mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think it is the universal etiquette not to enter upon any business until the President has been informed that the two Houses are in session and his communication has been received. This, perhaps, is not the time to speak of his character and of his services to his State and the nation. On some future occasion we shall ask that the ordinary business of the Senate be suspended in order that appropriate tribute may be paid to his memory. In the meantime I offer the following resolutions, and selve for their immediate consideration. memory. In the meantime I offer the following resolutions, and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolutions submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, December 2, 1901.

This day, in compliance with the provisions of the Constitution, the members-elect of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress assembled in their Hall and were called to order by Mr. Alexander McDowell, the Clerk of the last House.
The Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., Chaplain of the last House,

The Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., Chaplain of the last House, offered the following prayer:

Eternal and everliving God our Father, through whose infinite wisdom, power, and goodness our Republic has been brought through all the vicissitudes of the past in triumph, we bless Thee for its phenomenal growth, its unparalleled prosperity, its influence at home and abroad, and for the bright hopes and promises for its future. Fire the heart of each citizen throughout our land with earnestness and zeal for its welfare and for the great principles upon which it is founded, and help us to distinguish clearly between liberty and license, order and chaos, government and between liberty and license, order and chaos, government and anarchy, "for righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Let Thy blessing descend in full measure upon the members of the Congress now convened, and guide them in their strenuous endeavors to enact just and equitable laws and provide for the maintenance of our Government. Uplaws and provide for the maintenance of our Government. Up-hold and sustain the Speaker of this House in his arduous duties, and O God, our Heavenly Father, be graciously near the Presi-dent of these United States, protect him from violent death, and support him in his endeavors to minister efficiently and ably the affairs of state. Protect his advisers and keep them ever in touch with him, that they may assist and strengthen him in all good purposes. We meet in faith and hope and confidence, but not without sorrow and regret that several who would have been with us to-day have been removed by death to that larger life. Comfort, we beseech Thee, the stricken families with the hope and blessed promises of immortality. It is with the deepest sorrow and pathos that we recall the untimely death of our lamented President, but we thank Thee for the great character that stamped itself upon those who knew him, and for his example living and for his sublime faith and trust in the hour of death. Be with the invalid widow in her loneliness and sorrow, sustain her in the remaining years of her life, and bring her finally in triumph to him and to Thee.

In the name and spirit of the Lord Christ our Saviour, we way

When Mr. Henderson appeared with the members designated, the members of the House, rising in a body, greeted him with loud and general applause, which was renewed as he ascended to the chair

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, the Speaker. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, this high honor which you have conferred upon me I profoundly appreciate. All the more do I appreciate it coming, as it does, with this generous expression from both sides of the Chamber. There is yet left another method for a presiding officer to express his appreciation of such an honor; that is, by a kindly, firm, and faithful administration of the law and the rules that govern this body. It will be my aim to discharge impartially the duties of this office.

As I said at the opening of the last Congress, no presiding officer can successfully administer the duties of his office unless he has the support of the body over which he presides. I asked for has the support of the body over which he presides. I asked for it then; you gave it to me throughout the entire Congress. Permit me once more to invoke that patience, kind consideration, and splendid support which was accorded to me in the last Congress. The maker of laws should not be a breaker of laws. We proceed under law and rules; and the duties devolving upon each and all of the membership of this House will be far better conserved if the invitation of the second constant of the second constan if this principle is kept in mind and acted upon.

Again sincerely thanking you each and all, I am ready to take the prescribed oath of office.

Mr. Bingham, the member longest in continuous service in the House, was named by the Clerk to administer the oath of office to the Speaker-elect; and the oath was accordingly administered.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll by States and Territories; and Members and Delegates as their names are called will please come forward to the area in front of the Clerk's desk and take the prescribed oath of office.

The SPEAKER then administered the oath of office to the Members and Delegates presenting themselves.

Mr. Butler of Pennsylvania qualified by affirmation.

THE RULES

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The resolution was read, as follows:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress be adopted as the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress, with the following modifications:

1. That the special orders adopted March 8 and March 14, 1900, providing a method for the consideration of pension bills, claim bills, and other private bills, shall be continued during the Fifty-seventh Congress.

2. That the place of the Select Committee on the Twelfth Census in the rules of the Fifty-sixth Congress shall be filled in the rules of the Fifty-seventh Congress by a standing Committee on the Census, to consist of thirteen members, and have jurisdiction of all proposed legislation concerning the census and the apportionment of Representatives.

Resolved further, That there shall be appointed to serve during the Fifty-seventh Congress a Select Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to consist of nine members, which shall have jurisdiction of all matters (excepting those relating to the revenue and appropriations) referring to the Centennial of the Louisiana Purchase and to proposed expositions.

Resolved further, That the Select Committee on the Examination and Disposition of Documents of the Fifty-sixth Congress shall be continued during the Fifty-seventh Congress as a select committee.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the object of this resolution—

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the object of this resolution—
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman pardon me a moment? I want to ask the gentleman if he is going to allow us any opportunity for debate and for offering amendments to the rules? The gentleman understands that if he debates this proposition and then moves the previous question it will preclude any further debate.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time would the gentleman like to have?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We want an opportunity to offer some amendments to these rules.

Mr. DALZELL. I will say to my friend from Tennessee that I propose to move the previous question after such debate as may be agreed upon.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And not permit any amend-

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And not permit any amendment whatever to be offered?

Mr. DALZELL. That is my purpose.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that is not treating us with fairness; that the gentleman ought to allow us an opportunity at least to offer some amendments to cure the defects in these rules. I wish to offer amendments, and I think the gentleman will not object to some of them, possibly—I add "possibly."

Mr. DALZELL. I will suggest to my friend from Tennessee that he can put his amendments in the shape of a resolution and that he can put his amendments in the shape of a resolution and send them to the Committee on Rules at any time. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. To sleep the sleep of death forever. Now, Mr. Speaker, of course the gentlemen on that side of the House have it in their power to crush us out in this matter. They have the majority sufficient to do it, unless my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] will muster his 40 men. [Laughter.] I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Iowa has 40 votes to back him; but if I am to depend upon the statement in our morning paper here on Saturday, he has 40 gentlemen on that side of the House up in arms and ready to follow his lead in an effort to to amend these rules. Now, if he will bring his 40 men forward. I pledge him 150 or 160 on this side will bring his 40 men forward, I pledge him 150 or 160 on this side of the House, and we will change the rules. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer this amendment, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. DALZELL. I have the floor and have not yielded it to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I thought the gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. DALZELL. I asked how much time the gentleman wanted-

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We want one hour.

Mr. DALZELL (continuing). And you proceeded to make a

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We want an hour to debate this proposition.

Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. DALZELL. We can not accept that. I have only an hour. Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The House can give it. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to give us an hour, I am sure there will be no objection on this side of the House.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. I am very much astonished at the attitude of my friends on the other side. This is precisely the same method of proceeding as was had in the last Congress, and it was then acquiesced in very cordially by gentlemen on that side. These rules are very familiar to the great hedy of the House on both rules are very familiar to the great body of the House on both sides of the Chamber. They are the rules of the Fifty-first Congress, the Fifty-fourth Congress, Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Congresses, and almost the rules of the Fifty-third Congress, because our friends upon the other side in their last administration here adopted almost all the amendments to the rules of the Fifty-first Congress, including the rule as to dilatory motions and the method of counting a quorum and, it seems to me, the number of the Committee of the Whole—though I am not clear about that—so that there is no necessity at all for any lengthy discussion to enlighten the House.

Now, to explain the modifications we have suggested in reference to the rules. First, with reference to the Friday night sessions. If these rules be adopted, we will not have any Friday night sessions. The same method of procedure that was adopted as a special order toward the end of the last Congress will give us two ridays each month for pension legislation and the other alternate Fridays for the Committee on War Claims and the Committee on Claims. Then it is proposed that the Committee on the Census—that was a select committee in the last House—shall be made a permanent standing committee of the House, consisting of the same number of members and having the same jurisdiction.

The committee that served in the last House under the title of the "Committee on the Centennial of the Louisiana Purchase" has been changed in name to the "Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions;" and the purpose is to send to that committee all legislation respecting the centennial of the Louisiana purchase, and respecting expositions, if there be any such offered, saving and excepting the matter of revenue and appropriation bills. Then gentlemen will recollect that toward the end of the last Congress a select committee was appointed to take up the matter of the disposition of the vast accumulation of documents in the Capitol. This committee has done very effective work, but a great deal remains to be done, and the purpose is to continue that committee as a select committee during this Congress.

I now ask for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A moment, before you do

Mr. DALZELL. How much time does the gentleman want?
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much time will the gentleman give me? I know that I am at the mercy of the gen-

Mr. DALZELL. I will endeavor to make it suit the gentleman. Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will only take a few moments-five minutes

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has assured us that there is perfect satisfaction in the House of Representatives with these rules. Now, if that is true, we have been misinformed; we have been misled by that is true, we have been misinformed; we have been misled by what we have seen published in respect to a number of gentlemen on that side of the Chamber. We know, Mr. Speaker, that the House of Representatives is not satisfied and the country is not satisfied with the rules of the House of Representatives. The only way, Mr. Speaker, by which we can have an opportunity to amend these rules, and to make them more perfect, will be to vote down this demand for the previous question. If that is done, I will propose an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and with this amendment I would vote for the rules temporarily, and that amendment is that the rules remain

Pennsylvania, and with this amendment I would vote for the rules temporarily, and that amendment is that the rules remain in force for forty days from this day, unless otherwise ordered by the House. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

That, Mr. Speaker, has been the course repeatedly in adopting rules for the government of the House of Representatives. It is not new. Gentlemen laugh as if they never heard of it. Perhaps they have never read the RECORD. If they will read the RECORD they will find that the distinguished gentleman from Maine (Mr. Reed) made that motion on one occasion, I think. At any rate it has been made in former Congresses in order that the House may have time for the consideration of permanent rules before they are adopted for the government of the body. If that fails I intend to move—and I think I have that right, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the demand for the previous question made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], because under the rules such a motion has always been held to be in order—I shall move to commit the rules to the Committee on Rules when apmove to commit the rules to the Committee on Rules when appointed, and upon that we shall expect that gentlemen on the other side, at least forty of them, will vote with me. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

I hope my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] will not disappoint us in this expectation. We have heard too often from that gentleman, and we know, notwithstanding the assurance of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman from Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman inform the House whether or not there are more than 40 members on that side who will vote for the McClellan resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would answer the gentleman, but the gentleman has things mixed. We are not discussing legislation, but the rules.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Tennessee is hinting very strongly at the caucus action.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Indiana think that the McClellan resolution is among the rules of the House? If the gentleman wants to offer that as an amendment we will consider it.

Mr. STEELE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee know whether he will vote for the McClellan resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will not vote for it as an amendment to the rules, but I will vote for it in shaping legislation. Does the gentleman decline to give us an opportunity to offer an amendment to the rules?

Mr. STEELE. If it was myself, I say that I would give you but but very little time. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not expect the gentleman would. Now, I can not undertake to point out the defects in these rules in the limited time I have. They are arbitrary, they are undemocratic and unrepublican. We ought to modify them so that a majority of the members of the House, a majority of both sides of the House, may consider such measures as may seem wise to that majority. Under the present rules it is impos-sible for a majority of the House to enter upon the consideration of any measure, however wise it may be in their judgment, except in a most qualified way.

There can be no harm, it seems to me, in permitting the rules to go to the Committee on Rules, when appointed, and let them report the rules back with such amendments as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has himself suggested, with such other amend-ments as may occur to members of the House who have had a long experience in this body.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it is only within the last two or three Congresses that the rules have been rammed down the throats of the members of this House without any opportunity whatever to consider them, just as you are proposing to do to-day. In the little experience I have had on this floor I have known the rules to be debated for two weeks, and even longer. Frequently from five to ten days have been devoted to the discussion of the rules in the effort to make them perfect, so that we may consider business regulary and properly. But in the last two Congresses the rules have been adopted without one word of debate upon the principles involved and with only a minute or two, as I am now occupying the floor to-day, simply to protest against their adoption.

I shall not take further time, but I wish I had the time to point out some of the defects. But I do suggest that we give the Committee on Rules, when appointed, an opportunity to perfect this system of rules for the government of the House in a proper manner

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield me five minutes

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa five min-

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has made reference to me two or three times during his remarks, and it is proper, perhaps, that I should say a word. It is well known to many members of this House that heretofore I have had an opinion that the rules were not per-It is well known to many members of this House fect; that there were amendments that might be made that would tend to the better government of this House; but I have not had this opinion alone during the last few days. I have entertained it for many years, and since I have been a member of the House I have endeavored in season and, some gentlemen would say, out of season to secure a change.

As early as the Fifty-third Congress I made an effort in that direction. The House was then presided over by a distinguished Democrat, and there was a majority of Democrats controlling the business of the House. The Democratic portion of that Congress voted unanimously to sustain the rules as they are to-day, gress voted unanimously to sustain the rules as they are to-day, and especially every one that we now regard as objectionable. [Laughter on the Republican side.] The rule that gives the Speaker his power was adopted in a Democratic Congress, in the Forty-sixth Congress. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], on the occasion that I refer to, was one of those most bitterly objecting to the changes that I propose. [Laughter on the Republican side.] He was then contending for all of these rules that I now charge as pernicious, and he was sustained in that judgment by that side of the House. The objections that I would raise have been submitted to my Republican colleagues. I would raise have been submitted to my Republican colleagues, and by a large majority they decided that the changes I would advocate were not judicious ones; and, Mr. Speaker, I do insist that I possess that measure of modesty that when I find the whole Democratic side of the House against me and a large majority of my Republican colleagues gainst me I must district the jority of my Republican colleagues against me I must distrust the wisdom of my own conclusions. [Laughter on the Republican

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the Chair understands, asks for the previous question.

Mr. SWANSON. I would like the gentleman to yield to me for ten minutes. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]
Mr. DALZELL. I can not.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Have I not the right to have the rules of the last House read?

The SPEAKER. The only question before the House is the motion to order the previous question on the pending resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask for the reading of the rules of the last House.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done pending the demand for the previous question on the resolution which is now before

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order at this tin Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. When is it in order? The SPEAKER. The Chair will meet that question when it arises. [Laughter.] It is clearly not in order now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The rules say that a motion to recommit shall be in order pending the demand for the previous question or after the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman assumes that we are proceeding under rules which are not now in force.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then what rules, may I ask, govern us now The SPEAKER. General parliamentary law-that is all-un-

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. When is my motion in or-

So the motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules, was rejected.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I am paired on this question with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Hull. Were he present, I would vote in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SWANSON. I would like to offer another motion, if it be in order, to refer the resolution with instructions. We are pro-We are proceeding, I understand, under "general parliamentary law;" and the simple motion for reference having been voted down, I think a motion to refer with instructions would now be in order. I dea motion to refer with instructions with the sire to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, which the Chair admitted, involved a very close and doubtful question as to whether it was in order. But the Chair preferred to have the motion passed upon by the House rather than ruled upon by the Chair. The Chair is, however, very clearly of the opinion that another motion to refer can not now be entertained.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask for the reading of the rules of the last

House, so that we may know what is before us for consideration.
The SPEAKER. That can not be done now.
Mr. SWANSON. I demand as a matter of right that a separate vote be taken on each separate rule. I understand that each rule is a distinctive proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question here is upon a simple resolution, and the Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman would be out of order.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Chair permit me a moment?

The SPEAKER. There is a great deal of business to be done this afternoon, but the Chair does not desire to be discourteous or to deny the floor to any member without good reason.

Mr. SWANSON. All Iask is to state my proposition. My motion is to take a separate vote on each rule—on each proposition. The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled that motion out of order.

Does the gentleman ask a separate vote on the propositions contained in this resolution or a separate vote on all the rules?

Mr. SWANSON. The resolution contains a proposition that we adopt all the rules of the last House, and therefore each rule is made a part of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that such a demand can not be entertained.

Mr. SWANSON. Then I demand a separate vote on each separate vote on each separate vote.

rate proposition contained in the resolution—each amendment as therein proposed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands a separate vote on each separate proposition in the resolution. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman has the right to make that Mr. DALZELL. Is that demand made on the resolution which I offered?

The SPEAKER. The resolution offered by the gentleman from

The SPEAKER. The resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania contains several distinctive propositions.

Mr. DALZELL. It contains probably three propositions; but the first is indivisible. I refer to the proposition that we adopt the rules of the Fifty-sixth Congress "with the following modifications," and the two paragraphs immediately following.

Those embrace one subject, and are incapable of division.

The SPEAKER. The first branch of the resolution, as just recited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is not capable of division; the Chair so holds: but the Chair is of ominion that each division; the Chair so holds; but the Chair is of opinion that each resolve is a separate proposition, and a separate vote may be demanded upon it.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the Chair is right on that.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I had no desire to filibuster or delay the proceedings of the House in the adoption of these rules. I simply addressed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania a courteous request that I be allowed ten minutes to speak. This side was accorded only five minutes, and I proposed merely that there should be allowed to us as much time as was accorded to the other side. All I desire is simply to state my views in reference to these rules, and I think as a Representative I am entitled to that privi-

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will report that portion of the resolution which will be first voted upon.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress be adopted as the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress, with the following modifications:

1. That the special orders adopted March 8 and March 14, 1900, providing a method for the consideration of pension bills, claim bills, and other private bills shall be continued during the Fifty-seventh Congress.

2. That the place of the Select Committee on the Twelfth Census in the rules of the Fifty-sixth Congress shall be filled in the rules of the Fifty-seventh Congress by a standing committee on the census, to consist of 13 members, and have jurisdiction of all proposed legislation concerning the census and the apportionment of Representatives.

The SPEAKER The question is on agreeing to the position of

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the portion of the resolution just read.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire an opportunity to vote on the first proposition—that we adopt the rules of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

The SPEAKER. This is the first distinctive branch of the resolution. [The question was put.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. SWANSON. I demand the yeas and nays on this propo-

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 27 voting in favor thereof.

The first division of the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next division of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That there shall be appointed to serve during the Fifty-seventh Congress a Select Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to consist of 9 members, which shall have jurisdiction of all matters (excepting those relating to the revenue and appropriations) referring to the Centennial of the Louisiana Purchase and to proposed expositions.

The question being taken on agreeing to the second division of the resolution, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the third and last division of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That the Select Committee on the Examination and Disposition of Documents of the Fifty-sixth Congress shall be continued during the Fifty-seventh Congress as a select committee.

The third division of the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. This completes the action on this resolution.
Mr. DALZELL. I move to reconsider the votes by which the resolution has been agreed to, and also move that the motion to resolution has been agreed to, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this resolution has not been adopted as a whole. The question has been taken separately on these different amendments, but the whole resolution as amended has not been voted upon. The question, I understand, is now on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. All the separate propositions embraced in this resolution have been adopted, and that adopts the whole resolution.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers the following resolution, which the Clerk will report to the House.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered, the daily hour of meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING OF DIGEST AND MANUAL.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submits the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved. That there be printed 2,000 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, the same to be bound and distributed under the direction of the Speaker and Clerk of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to draw seats for Members and Delegates of the present Congress, in pursuance of Rule XXXII, and when names of members absent from the city or on account of sickness are called, that seats be selected for them by their colleagues.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, heretofore, in drawing for seats, the members of the House have gone outside of the railing. All we have to do is to cast our eyes about us and see that there is no room for that now. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be so amended that the members of the House may go into the lobby, letting these doors be open, with pages or messengers stationed at the doors, to announce the names of gentlemen as they are called. Otherwise, it seems to me, we shall have great con-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that the resolution be so amended that the members waiting for the drawing may occupy the lobby and that pages announce the names of members when called. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend a moment until the rule relating to this matter is read?

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXII.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

1. At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls, of marble or other material, equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

Mr. Sherrand Mr. Speaker, before the drawing begins, I ask

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, before the drawing begins, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow], an ex-Speaker of this House, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bingham], the Father of the House, be permitted to choose their seats. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Sherman] asks unanimous consent that Representative Grow, an ex-Speaker of the House, and Representative Bingham, the Father of the House, be permitted to select their seats without drawing.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there is a gentleman on this side of the House who I know has not been here during all the sessions since he first became a member, but who during all the sessions since he first became a member, but who was a member of the Forty-third Congress. That is Mr. Creamer, of New York; and I ask that he also be allowed to select his seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] adds to the request of the gentleman from New York the further request that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Creamer] be allowed to draw his seat. Is there objection to these requests?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to add the name of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], the leader of the Democratic minority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the name of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Richardson], the floor leader on the Democratic side, be added to these requests. Is there objection to these four requests?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that there are so many floral gifts in the general lobby that it may be necessary to use the other lobbies in order to carry out the order of the House.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to members standing outside of this railing if they want to, is there?

The SPEAKER. The rule does not exclude them from doing it, but opens up the larger field also. The Doorkeeper will appoint pages for the several doors, in accordance with the order of the House. Gentlemen will please vacate the floor of the House, except the four specially named. It will not be permitted for any other Member to stay inside the floor. All others must vacate before the order will be put into execution. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] will please select his seat. [Applause.] The drawing of seats began at 3 o'clock and 26 minutes, and was concluded at 4 o'clock and 23 minutes.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives a list of contests for seats in the House of Representatives for the Fifty-seventh Congress of the United States, notices of which have been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House, and also transmit herewith all original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto, as follows, to wit:

State of Alabama, Seventh district.
State of Kentucky, Third district.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

C.

Resolved, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition at Charleston, S. C., upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty, and all foreign exhibits which shall be transferred in bond from the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, N. Y., shall be admitted free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the exposition building or on the grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption in the United States, shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed apon such articles by the revenue laws at the date of the importation, and all penalties prescribed by laws shall be supplied and enforced against such articles and against the person who may be guilty of any illegal sale or withdrawal: And provided further, That the buildings and spaces set apart for the purpose of the said exposition shall be constituted "constructive bonded warehouses and yards," and all foreign articles placed therein shall be under customs supervision and treated as merchandise in bond.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the joint resolution if the gentleman from South Carolina will accept the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read for his

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment which the gentleman from New York offers to the resolution pending the determination of the question of unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States by the exposition company under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That in the passage of this joint resolution the United States does not assume any liability of any kind whatever and does not become responsible in any manner for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability of the said company, its officers, agents, servants, or employees or incident to or growing out of said exposition.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that that is the same amendment as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means to legislation for the Buffalo Pan-American Exposition and several other expositions.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to that amendment. In fact, all those arrangements have already been made as to the matter of the expense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ELLIOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Also, that a committee of three had been appointed by the Speaker, on the part of the House of Representatives, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of each of the two Houses had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make, and Mr. BINGHAM of Pennsylvania, Mr. PAYNE of New York, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee had been appointed such committee on the part of the House.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. Hale and Mr. Morgan, the committee appointed, in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared at the bar; and

Mr. HALE said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President, in conjunction with a like committee of the House of Representatives, and inform him of the organization of the two Houses and to ask him if he desired to make any communication to Congress, have attended to that duty, and the President was pleased to reply that he would forthwith communicate a message in writing to the two Houses.

United States, appeared below the bar and said:
Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message to the Congress.

The message was received from the secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read: The Secretary read the message, as follows: To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The Congress assembles this year under the shadow of a great calamity. On the sixth of September, President McKinley was shot by an anarchist while attending the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, and died in that city on the fourteenth of that month.

Of the last seven elected Presidents, he is the third who has been murdered, and the bare recital of this fact is sufficient to justify grave alarm among all loyal American citizens. Moreover, the circumstances of this, the third assassination of an American President, have a peculiarly sinister significance. Both President Lincoln and President Garfield were killed by assassins of types unfortunately not uncommon in history; President Lincoln falling a victim to the terrible passions aroused by four years of civil war, and President Garfield to the revengeful vanity of a disappointed office-seeker. President McKinley was killed by an utterly depraved criminal belonging to that body of criminals who object to all governments, good and bad alike, who are against any form of popular liberty if it is guaranteed by even the most just and liberal laws, and who are as hostile to the upright exponent of a free people's sober will as to the tyrannical and irresponsible despot. and irresponsible despot.

It is not too much to say that at the time of President McKinley's death he was the most widely loved man in all the United States; while we have never had any public man of his position who has been so wholly free from the bitter animosities incident to public life. His political opponents were the first to bear the heartiest and most generous tribute to the broad kindliness of nature, the sweetness and gentleness of character which so en-deared him to his close associates. To a standard of lofty integrity in public life he united the tender affections and home virtues which are all-important in the make-up of national character. A which are all-important in the make-up of national character. A gallant soldier in the great war for the Union, he also shone as an example to all our people because of his conduct in the most sacred and intimate of home relations. There could be no personal hatred of him, for he never acted with aught but consideration for the welfare of others. No one could fail to respect him who knew him in public or private life. The defenders of those murderous criminals who seek to excuse their criminality by essentiant that it is expressed for political ends inveite against murderous criminals who seek to excuse their criminality by asserting that it is exercised for political ends, inveigh against wealth and irresponsible power. But for this assassination even this base apology cannot be urged.

President McKinley was a man of moderate means, a man whose stock sprang from the sturdy tillers of the soil, who had himself belonged among the wage-workers, who had entered the Army as a private soldier. Wealth was not struck at when the President was assassinated, but the honest toil which is content with moderate gains after a lifetime of unremitting labor largely in the erate gains after a lifetime of unremitting labor, largely in the service of the public. Still less was power struck at in the sense that power is irresponsible or centered in the hands of any one individual. The blow was not aimed at tyranny or wealth. It was aimed at one of the strongest champions the wage-worker has ever had; at one of the most faithful representatives of the system of public rights and representative government who has ever risen to public office. President McKinley filled that political office for which the entire people vote, and no President—not even Lincoln himself—was ever more earnestly anxious to represent the well-thought-out wishes of the people; his one anxiety in every crisis was to keep in closest touch with the people—to find out what they thought and to endeavor to give expression to and out what they thought and to endeavor to give expression to their thought, after having endeavored to guide that thought aright. He had just been re-elected to the Presidency because the majority of our citizens, the majority of our farmers and wageworkers, believed that he had faithfully upheld their interests for four years. They felt themselves in close and intimate touch with him. They felt that he represented so well and so honorably all their ideals and aspirations that they wished him to continue for enother four years to represent them for another four years to represent them.

And this was the man at whom the assassin struck! That there might be nothing lacking to complete the Judas-like infamy of his act, he took advantage of an occasion when the President was meeting the people generally; and advancing as if to take the hand outstretched to him in kindly and brotherly fellowship, he turned the noble and generous confidence of the victim into an opportunity to strike the fatal blow. There is no baser deed in all the annals of crime.

The shock, the grief of the country, are bitter in the minds of all who saw the dark days, while the President yet hovered between life and death. At last the light was stilled in the kindly eyes and the breath went from the lips that even in mortal agony uttered no words save of forgiveness to his murderer, of love for his friends, and of unfaltering trust in the will of the Most High. death, crowning the glory of such a life, leaves us with infinite sorrow, but with such pride in what he had accomplished and in his own personal character, that we feel the blow not as struck at him, but as struck at the Nation. We mourn a good and great President who is dead; but while we mourn we are lifted up by the splendid achievements of his life and the grand heroism with which he met his death.

When we turn from the man to the Nation, the harm done is so great as to excite our gravest apprehensions and to demand our wisest and most resolute action. This criminal was a professed anarchist, inflamed by the teachings of professed anarchists, and probably also by the reckless utterances of those who, on the stump and in the public press, appeal to the dark and evil spirits of malice and greed, envy and sullen hatred. The wind is sowed by the men who preach such doctrines, and they cannot escape their share of responsibility for the whirlwind that is reaped. This applies alike to the deliberate demagogue, to the exploiter of sensationalism, and to the crude and foolish visionary who, for whatever reason, apologizes for crime or excites aimless discontent.

The blow was aimed not at this President, but at all Presidents; at every symbol of government. President McKinley was as emphatically the embodiment of the popular will of the Nation expressed through the forms of law as a New England town meeting is in similar fashion the embodiment of the law-abiding purpose and practice of the people of the town. On no conceivable theory could the murder of the President be accepted as due to protest against "inequalities in the social order," save as the murder of all the freemen engaged in a town meeting could be accepted as a protest against that social inequality which puts a malefactor in jail. Anarchy is no more an expression of "social discontent"

The anarchist, and especially the anarchist in the United States, is merely one type of criminal, more dangerous than any other because he represents the same depravity in a greater degree. The man who advocates anarchy directly or indirectly, in any shape or fashion, or the man who apologizes for anarchists and their deeds, makes himself morally accessory to murder before the fact. The anarchist is a criminal whose perverted instincts lead him to prefer confusion and chaos to the most beneficent form of social order. His protest of concern for workingmen is outrageous in its impudent falsity; for if the political institutions of this country do not afford opportunity to every honest and intelligent son of toil, then the door of hope is forever closed against him. The anarchist is everywhere not merely the enemy of system and of progress, but the deadly foe of liberty. If ever anarchy is triumphant, its triumph will last for but one red moment, to be succeeded for ages by the gloomy night of despotism.

For the anarchist himself, whether he preaches or practices his doctrines, we need not have one particle more concern than for any ordinary murderer. He is not the victim of social or political injustice. There are no wrongs to remedy in his case. The cause of his criminality is to be found in his own evil passions and in the evil conduct of those who urge him on, not in any failand in the evil conduct of those who urge him on, not in any failure by others or by the State to do justice to him or his. He is a malefactor and nothing else. He is in no sense, in no shape or way, a "produce of social conditions," save as a highwayman is "produced" by the fact that an unarmed man happens to have a purse. It is a travesty upon the great and holy names of liberty and freedom to permit them to be invoked in such a cause. No man or body of men preaching anarchistic doctrines should be allowed at large any more than if preaching the murder of some specified private individual. Anarchistic speeches, writings, and meetings are essentially seditions and treasonable.

I earnestly recommend to the Congress that in the exercise of its wise discretion it should take into consideration the coming to its wise discretion it should take into consideration the coming to this country of anarchists or persons professing principles hostile to all government and justifying the murder of those placed in authority. Such individuals as those who not long ago gathered in open meeting to glorify the murder of King Humbert of Italy perpetrate a crime, and the law should insure their rigorous punishment. They and those like them should be kept out of this country; and if found here they should be promptly deported to the country whence they came; and far reaching provision to the country whence they came; and far-reaching provision should be made for the punishment of those who stay. No mat-ter calls more urgently for the wisest thought of the Congress. The Federal courts should be given jurisdiction over any man who kills or attempts to kill the President or any man who by the Constitution or by law is in line of succession for the Presidency, while the punishment for an unsuccessful attempt should be pro portioned to the enormity of the offense against our institutions.

Anarchy is a crime against the whole human race; and all mankind should band against the anarchist. His crime should be made an offense against the law of nations, like piracy and that form of manstealing known as the slave trade; for it is of far blacker infamy than either. It should be so declared by treaties among all civilized powers. Such treaties would give to the Federal Government the power of dealing with the crime.

A grim commentary upon the folly of the anarchist position was afforded by the attitude of the law toward this very criminal who had just taken the life of the President. The people would have torn him limb from limb if it had not been that the law he defied was at once invoked in his behalf. So far from his deed being committed on behalf of the people against the Government, the Government was obliged at once to exert its full police power to save him from instant death at the hands of the people. Moreover, his deed worked not the slightest dislocation in our governmental system, and the danger of a recurrence of such deeds, no matter how great it might grow, would work only in the direction of strengthening and giving harshness to the forces of order. No man will ever be restrained from becoming President by any fear as to his personal safety. If the risk to the President's life became great, it would mean that the office would more and more come to be filled by men of a spirit which would make them resolute and merciless in dealing with every friend of disorder. great country will not fall into anarchy; and if anarchists should ever become a serious menace to its institutions, they would not ever become a serious menace to its insulation, with ruin every merely be stamped out, but would involve in their own ruin every merely be stamped out, but would involve in their doctrines. The Ameriactive or passive sympathizer with their doctrines. The American people are slow to wrath, but when their wrath is once kindled it burns like a consuming flame.

During the last five years business confidence has been restored, and the Nation is to be congratulated because of its present abounding prosperity. Such prosperity can never be created by law alone, although it is easy enough to destroy it by mischievous laws. If the hand of the Lord is heavy upon any country, if flood or drought comes, human wisdom is powerless to avert the calamity. Moreover, no law can guard us against the consequences of our own folly. The men who are idle or gradulous quences of our own folly. The men who are idle or credulous, the men who seek gains not by genuine work with head or hand, but by gambling in any form, are always a source of menace not only to themselves, but to others. If the business world loses its head, it loses what legislation cannot supply. Fundamentally the welfare of each citizen, and therefore the welfare of the aggregate of citizens which makes the Nation, must rest upon individual thrift and energy, resolution and intelligence. Nothing can ual thrift and energy, resolution and intelligence. Nothing can take the place of this individual capacity; but wise legislation and honest and intelligent administration can give it the fullest scope, the largest opportunity to work to good effect.

The tremendous and highly complex industrial development which went on with ever accelerated rapidity during the latter half of the nineteenth century brings us face to face, at the beginning of the twentieth, with very serious social problems. The old laws, and the old customs which had almost the binding force of laws. force of law, were once quite sufficient to regulate the accumula-tion and distribution of wealth. Since the industrial changes which have so enormously increased the productive power of mankind, they are no longer sufficient.

The growth of cities has gone on beyond comparison faster than the growth of the country, and the upbuilding of the great industrial centers has meant a startling increase, not merely in the aggregate of wealth, but in the number of very large indi-vidual, and especially of very large corporate, fortunes. The creation of these great corporate fortunes has not been due to the tariff nor to any other governmental action, but to natural causes in the business world, operating in other countries as they operate

The process has aroused much antagonism, a great part of which is wholly without warrant. It is not true that as the rich have grown richer the poor have grown poorer. On the contrary, never before has the average man, the wage-worker, the farmer, the small trader, been so well off as in this country and at the present time. There have been abuses connected with the at the present time. There have been abuses connected with the accumulation of wealth; yet it remains true that a fortune accumulated in legitimate business can be accumulated by the person specially benefited only on condition of conferring immense incidental benefits upon others. Successful enterprise, of the type which benefits all mankind, can only exist if the conditions are such as to offer great prizes as the rewards of succes

The captains of industry, who have driven the railway systems across this continent, who have built up our commerce, who have developed our manufactures, have on the whole done great good to our people. Without them the material development of which we are so justly proud could never have taken place. Moreover, we should recognize the immense importance to this material development of leaving as unhampered as is compatible with the public good the strong and forceful men upon whom the success of business operations inevitably rests. The slightest study of business conditions will satisfy anyone capable of forming a judgment that the personal equation is the most important factor in a business operation; that the business ability of the man at the band of any business appears his or little is reveally the factor. head of any business concern, big or little, is usually the factor which fixes the gulf between striking success and hopeless failure.

An additional reason for caution in dealing with corporations is to be found in the international commercial conditions of to-day. The same business conditions which have produced the great aggregations of corporate and individual wealth have made them very potent factors in international commercial competition. Business concerns which have the largest means at their disposal and are managed by the ablest men are naturally those which take the lead in the strife for commercial supremacy among the nations of the world. America has only just begun to assume that commanding position in the international business world which we believe will more and more be hers. It is of the utmost importance that this position be not jeoparded, especially at a time when the overflowing abundance of our own natural resources and the skill, business energy, and mechanical aptitude of our people make foreign markets essential. Under such conditions it would be most unwise to cramp or to fetter the youth-

Moreover, it cannot too often be pointed out that to strike with ignorant violence at the interests of one set of men almost inevitably endangers the interests of all. The fundamental rule in our national life—the rule which underlies all others—is that, on the whole, and in the long run, we shall go up or down together.
There are exceptions; and in times of prosperity some will prosper far more, and in times of adversity some will suffer far more, than others; but speaking generally, a period of good times means that all share more or less in them, and in a period of hard times all feel the stress to a greater or less degree. It surely ought not to be necessary to enter into any proof of this statement; the memory of the lean years which began in 1893 is still vivid, and we can contrast them with the conditions in this very year which is now closing. Disaster to great business enterprises can never is now closing. Disaster to great business enterprises can never have its effects limited to the men at the top. It spreads throughout, and while it is bad for everybody, it is worst for those farthest down. The capitalist may be shorn of his luxuries; but the wage-worker may be deprived of even bare necessities.

The mechanism of modern business is so delicate that extreme care must be taken not to interfere with it in a spirit of rashness or ignerance. Many of those who have made it their vocation to denounce the great industrial combinations which are popularly, although with technical inaccuracy, known as "trusts," appeal although with technical inaccuracy, known as "trusts," appeal especially to hatred and fear. These are precisely the two emotions, particularly when combined with ignorance, which unfit men for the exercise of cool and steady judgment. In facing new industrial conditions, the whole history of the world shows that legislation will generally be both unwise and ineffective unless undertaken after calm inquiry and with sober self-restraint. Much of the legislation directed at the trusts would have been exceedingly wise history had it not also been entirely ineffective. exceedingly mischievous had it not also been entirely ineffective. In accordance with a well-known sociological law, the ignorant or reckless agitator has been the really effective friend of the evils which he has been nominally opposing. In dealing with business interests, for the Government to undertake by crude and ill-considered legislation to do what may turn out to be bad, would be to incur the risk of such far-reaching national disaster that it would be preferable to undertake nothing at all. The men who demand the impossible or the undesirable serve as the allies of the forces with which they are nominally at war, for they hamper those who would endeavor to find out in rational fashion what the wrongs really are and to what extent and in what manner it is practicable to apply remedies.

All this is true; and yet it is also true that there are real and grave evils, one of the chief being over-capitalization because of its many baleful consequences; and a resolute and practical effort must be made to correct these evils.

There is a widespread conviction in the minds of the American people that the great corporations known as trusts are in certain of their features and tendencies hurtful to the general welfare. This springs from no spirit of envy or uncharitableness, nor lack of pride in the great industrial achievements that have placed this country at the head of the nations struggling for commercial supremacy. It does not rest upon a lack of intelligent appreciation of the necessity of meeting changing and changed conditions of trade with new methods, nor upon ignorance of the fact that combination of capital in the effort to accomplish great things is necessary when the world's progress demands that great things be done. It is based upon sincere conviction that combination and concentration should be, not prohibited, but supervised and within the control of the control reasonable limits controlled; and in my judgment this conviction

It is no limitation upon property rights or freedom of contract to require that when men receive from Government the privilege of doing business under corporate form, which frees them from individual responsibility, and enables them to call into their enterprises the capital of the public, they shall do so upon absolutely truthful representations as to the value of the property in which the capital is to be invested. Corporations engaged in interstate commerce should be regulated if they are found to exercise a license working to the public injury. It should be as much the aim of those who seek for social betterment to rid the business world of crimes of cunning as to rid the entire body politic of the interest of the public, the Government should have the right the interest of the public, the Government should have the right to inspect and examine the workings of the great corporations engaged in interstate business. Publicity is the only sure rem-edy which we can now invoke. What further remedies are needed in the way of governmental regulation, or taxation, can only be determined after publicity has been obtained, by process of law, and in the course of administration. The first requisite is knowledge, full and complete-knowledge which may be made public to the world.

Artificial bodies, such as corporations and joint stock or other associations, depending upon any statutory law for their existence or privileges, should be subject to proper governmental supervision, and full and accurate information as to their operations should be made public regularly at reasonable intervals.

The large corporations, commonly called trusts, though organizations of the desired commonly called trusts, though organizations.

ized in one State, always do business in many States, often doing very little business in the State where they are incorporated. There is utter lack of uniformity in the State laws about them; and as no State has any exclusive interest in or power over their acts, it has in practice proved impossible to get adequate regulation through State action. Therefore, in the interest of the whole people, the Nation should, without interfering with the power of the States in the matter itself, also assume power of supervision and regulation over all corporations doing an interstate business and regulation over all corporations doing an interstate business. This is especially true where the corporation derives a portion of its wealth from the existence of some monopolistic element or tendency in its business. There would be no hardship in such supervision; banks are subject to it, and in their case it is now accepted as a simple matter of course. Indeed, it is probable that supervision of corporations by the National Government need not go so far as is now the case with the supervision exercised over them by so conservative a State as Massachusetts, in order to produce excellent results. produce excellent results.

When the Constitution was adopted, at the end of the eight-eenth century, no human wisdom could foretell the sweeping changes, alike in industrial and political conditions, which were to take place by the beginning of the twentieth century. At that time it was accepted as a matter of course that the several States were the proper authorities to regulate, so far as was then necessary, the comparatively insignificant and strictly localized corsary, the comparatively insignificant and strictly localized corporate bodies of the day. The conditions are now wholly different and wholly different action is called for. I believe that a law can be framed which will enable the National Government to exercise control along the lines above indicated; profiting by the experience gained through the passage and administration of the Interstate-Commerce Act. If, however, the judgment of the Congress is that it lacks the constitutional power to pass such an ext. then a constitutional amondment should be submitted to act, then a constitutional amendment should be submitted to

There should be created a Cabinet officer, to be known as Secretary of Commerce and Industries, as provided in the bill introduced at the last session of the Congress. It should be his province to deal with commerce in its broadest sense; including among many other things whatever concerns labor and all matters affecting the great business corporations and our merchant marine.

The course proposed is one phase of what should be a compre hensive and far-reaching scheme of constructive statesmanship for the purpose of broadening our markets, securing our business interests on a safe basis, and making firm our new position in the international industrial world; while scrupulously safeguarding the rights of wage-worker and capitalist, of investor and private citizen, so as to secure equity as between man and man in this Republic.

Republic.

With the sole exception of the farming interest, no one matter whole people as the welfare of the is of such vital moment to our whole people as the welfare of the wage-workers. If the farmer and the wage-worker are well off, it is absolutely certain that all others will be well off, too. It is therefore a matter for hearty congratulation that on the whole wages are higher to-day in the United States than ever before in wages are higher to-day in the United States than ever before in our history, and far higher than in any other country. The standard of living is also higher than ever before. Every effort of legislator and administrator should be bent to secure the permanency of this condition of things and its improvement whereever possible. Not only must our labor be protected by the tariff, but it should also be protected so far as it is possible from the presence in this country of any laborers brought over by contract, or of those who, coming freely yet represent a standard of living or of those who, coming freely, yet represent a standard of living so depressed that they can undersell our men in the labor market and drag them to a lower level. I regard it as necessary, with this end in view, to re-enact immediately the law excluding Chinese laborers and to strengthen it wherever necessary in order to make its enforcement entirely effective.

world of crimes of culming as to rid the entire body points or crimes of violence. Great corporations exist only because they are created and safeguarded by our institutions; and it is therefore our right and our duty to see that they work in harmony with these institutions.

The first essential in determining how to deal with the great industrial combinations is knowledge of the facts—publicity. In convict contract labor in the open labor market. So far as practicable under the conditions of Government work, provision should be made to render the enforcement of the eight-hour law easy and certain. In all industries carried on directly or indirectly for the United States Government women and children should be protected from excessive hours of labor, from night work, and from work under unsanitary conditions. The Government should provide in its contracts that all work should be done under "fair" conditions, and in addition to setting a high standard the label of the properties of the label of the l ard should uphold it by proper inspection, extending if necessary to the subcontractors. The Government should forbid all night work for women and children, as well as excessive overtime. For the District of Columbia a good factory law should be passed; and, as a powerful indirect aid to such laws, provision should be made to turn the inhabited alleys, the existence of which is a reproach to our Capital City, into minor streets, where the inhabitants can live under conditions favorable to health and American wage-workers work with their heads as well as their hands. Moreover, they take a keen pride in what they are doing; so that, independent of the reward, they wish to turn out a perfect job. This is the great secret of our success in competition fect job. This is the great secret of our success in competition with the labor of foreign countries.

The most vital problem with which this country, and for that matter the whole civilized world, has to deal, is the problem which has for one side the betterment of social conditions, moral and physical, in large cities, and for another side the effort to deal with that tangle of far-reaching questions which we group together when we speak of "labor." The chief factor in the success of each man wave, worker farmer and capitalist alike cess of each man—wage-worker, farmer, and capitalist alike—must ever be the sum total of his own individual qualities and abilities. Second only to this comes the power of acting in combination or association with others. Very great good has been and will be accomplished by associations or unions of wage-workers, when managed with forethought, and when they combine insistence upon their own rights with law-abiding respect for the rights of others. The display of these qualities in such bodies is a duty to the Nation no less than to the associations themselves. Finally, there must also in many cases be action by the Government in order to safeguard the rights and interests of all.

our Constitution there is much more scope for such action by the State and the municipality than by the Nation. But on points such as those touched on above the National Government can act.

When all is said and done, the rule of brotherhood remains as the indispensable prerequisite to success in the kind of national life for which we strive. Each man must work for himself, and unless he so works no outside help can avail him; but each man must remember also that he is indeed his brother's begoer and must remember also that he is indeed his brother's keeper, and that while no man who refuses to walk can be carried with advantage to himself or anyone else, yet that each at times stumbles or halts, that each at times needs to have the helping hand outstretched to him. To be permanently effective, aid must always take the form of helping a man to help himself; and we can all best help ourselves by joining together in the work that is of common interest to all.

Our present immigration laws are unsatisfactory. We need every honest and efficient immigrant fitted to become an American citizen, every immigrant who comes here to stay, who brings here a strong body, a stout heart, a good head, and a resolute purpose to do his duty well in every way and to bring up his children as law-abiding and God-fearing members of the community. But there should be a comprehensive law enacted with the object of working a threefold improvement over our present system. First, we should aim to exclude absolutely not only all persons who are known to be believers in anarchistic principles or members of an-archistic societies, but also all persons who are of a low moral tendency or of unsavory reputation. This means that we should require a more thorough system of inspection abroad and a more rigid system of examination at our immigration ports, the former being especially necessary.

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure by a careful and not merely perfunctory educational test some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American citizens. This would not keep out all anarchists, for many of them belong to the intelligent criminal class. But it would do what is also in point, that is, tend to decrease the sum of ignorance, so potent in producing the envy, suspicion, malignant passion, and hatred of order, out of which anarchistic sentiment inevitably springs. Finally, all persons should be excluded who are below a certain standard of economic fitness to enter our industrial field as competitions with American fitness to enter our industrial field as competitors with American labor. There should be proper proof of personal capacity to earn an American living and enough money to insure a decent start under American conditions. This would stop the influx of cheap labor, and the resulting competition which gives rise to so much of bitterness in American industrial life; and it would dry up the springs of the pestilential social conditions in our great cities, where anarchistic organizations have their greatest possibility of growth.

Both the educational and economic tests in a wise immigration law should be designed to protect and elevate the general body politic and social. A very close supervision should be exercised over the steamship companies which mainly bring over the immigrants, and they should be held to a strict accountability for any infraction of the law.

There is general acquiescence in our present tariff system as a national policy. The first requisite to our prosperity is the continuity and stability of this economic policy. Nothing could be more unwise than to disturb the business interests of the country by any general tariff change at this time. Doubt, apprehension, uncertainty are exactly what we most wish to avoid in the interest of our commercial and material well-being. Our experience in the past has shown that sweeping revisions of the tariff are apt to produce conditions closely approaching panic in the business world. Yet it is not only possible, but eminently desirable, to combine with the stability of our economic system a supplementary system of reciprocal benefit and obligation with other nations. Such reciprocity is an incident and result of the firm establishment and preservation of our present economic policy. It was specially provided for in the present tariff law.

Reciprocity must be treated as the handmaiden of protection. Our first duty is to see that the protection granted by the tariff in every case where it is needed is maintained, and that reciprocity be sought for so far as it can safely be done without injury to our home industries. Just how far this is must be determined according to the individual case, remembering always that every application of our tariff policy to meet our shifting national needs must be conditioned upon the cardinal fact that the duties must never be reduced below the point that will cover the difference between the labor cost here and abroad. The well-being of the wage-worker is a prime consideration of our entire policy of economic legislation.

Subject to this proviso of the proper protection necessary to our industrial well-being at home, the principle of reciprocity must command our hearty support. The phenomenal growth of our export trade emphasizes the urgency of the need for wider markets and for a liberal policy in dealing with foreign nations. Whatever is merely petty and vexatious in the way of trade restrictions should be avoided. The customers to whom we dispose of our surplus products in the long run, directly or indirectly, purchase those surplus products by giving us something in return. Their ability to purchase our products should as far as possible be secured by so arranging our tariff as to enable us to take from them those products which we can use without harm to our own industries and ucts which we can use without harm to our own industries and labor, or the use of which will be of marked benefit to us.

It is most important that we should maintain the high level of our present prosperity. We have now reached the point in the development of our interests where we are not only able to supply our own markets, but to produce a constantly growing surplus for which we must find markets abroad. To secure these markets we can utilize existing duties in any case where they are no longer needed for the purpose of protection, or in any case where the article is not produced here and the duty is no longer necessary for revenue, as giving us something to offer in exchange for what we ask. The cordial relations with other nations which are so desirable will naturally be promoted by the course thus required by our own interests.

The natural line of development for a policy of reciprocity will be in connection with those of our productions which no longer require all of the support once needed to establish them upon a sound basis, and with those others where either because of natural or of economic causes we are beyond the reach of successful competition.

before it by my predecessor.

The condition of the American merchant marine is such as to call for immediate remedial action by the Congress. It is discreditable to us as a Nation that our merchant marine should be utterly insignificant in comparison to that of other nations which we overtop in other forms of business. We should not longer submit to conditions under which only a trifling portion of our great commerce is carried in our own ships. To remedy this state of things would not merely serve to build up our shipping interests, but it would also result in benefit to all who are interested in the permanent establishment of a wider market for American products, and would provide an auxiliary force for the Navy. Ships work for their own countries just as railroads work for their terminal points. Shipping lines, if established to the principal countries with which we have dealings, would be of political as well as commercial benefit. From every standpoint it is unwise for the United States to continue to rely upon the ships of competing nations for the distribution of our goods. It should be made advantageous to carry American goods in American-built ships.

At present American shipping is under certain great disadvan-tages when put in competition with the shipping of foreign coun-tries. Many of the fast foreign steamships, at a speed of fourteen knots or above, are subsidized; and all our ships, sailing vessels and steamers alike, cargo carriers of slow speed and mail carriers of high speed, have to meet the fact that the original cost of buildof mgn speed, have to meet the fact that the original cost of building American ships is greater than is the case abroad; that the wages paid American officers and seamen are very much higher than those paid the officers and seamen of foreign competing countries; and that the standard of living on our ships is far superior to the standard of living on the ships of our commercial rivals.

Our Government should take such action as will remedy these

to the ocean.

The Act of March 14, 1900, intended unequivocally to establish gold as the standard money and to maintain at a parity therewith all forms of money medium in use with us, has been shown to be timely and judicious. The price of our Government bonds in the world's market, when compared with the price of similar obligations is used by other nations, is a flattering tribute to our public world. This condition is suited by other nations, is a flattering tribute to our public world. edit. This condition it is evidently desirable to maintain. In many respects the National Banking Law furnishes sufficient liberty for the proper exercise of the banking function; but there seems to be need of better safeguards against the deranging influence of commercial crises and financial panics. Moreover, the currency of the country should be made responsive to the demands of our domestic trade and commerce.

The collections from duties on imports and internal taxes continue to exceed the ordinary expenditures of the Government, thanks mainly to the reduced army expenditures. The utmost care should be taken not to reduce the revenues so that there will be any possibility of a deficit; but, after providing against any such contingency, means should be adopted which will bring the revenues more nearly within the limit of our actual needs. In his report to the Congress the Secretary of the Treasury considers all these questions at length, and I ask your attention to the report and recommendations. port and recommendations.

I call special attention to the need of strict economy in expendi-ires. The fact that our national needs forbid us to be niggardly in providing whatever is actually necessary to our well-being should make us doubly careful to husband our national resources, as each of us husbands his private resources, by scrupulous avoidance of anything like wasteful or reckless expenditure. Only by avoidance of spending money on what is needless or unjustifiable can we legitimately keep our income to the point required to meet our needs that are genuine.

In 1887 a measure was enacted for the regulation of interstate railways, commonly known as the Interstate Commerce Act. The cardinal provisions of that act were that railway rates should be just and reasonable and that all shippers, localities, and commodities should be accorded equal treatment. A commission was created and endowed with what were supposed to be the necessary powers to execute the provisions of this act.

That law was largely an experiment. Experience has shown the wisdom of its purposes, but has also shown, possibly that some of its requirements are wrong, certainly that the means devised for the enforcement of its provisions are defective. Those who complain of the management of the railways allege that established rates are not maintained; that rebates and similar devices are habitually resorted to; that these preferences are usually in favor of the large shipper; that they drive out of business the smaller competitor; that while many rates are too low, many others are excessive; and that gross preferences are made, affecting both localities and commodities. Upon the other hand, the railways assert that the law by its very terms tends to produce many of these illegal practices by depriving carriers of that right of concerted action which they claim is necessary to establish and maintain non-discriminating rates.

The act should be amended. The railway is a public servant. Its rates should be just to and open to all shippers alike. The Government should see to it that within its jurisdiction this is so and should provide a speedy, inexpensive, and effective remedy to that end. At the same time it must not be forgotten that our railways are the arteries through which the commercial lifeblood of this nation flows. Nothing could be more foolish than the enactment of legislation which would unnecessarily interfere with the development and operation of these commercial agencies.

The Department of Agriculture during the past fifteen years has steadily broadened its work on economic lines, and has accomplished results of real value in upbuilding domestic and foreign trade. It has gone into new fields until it is now in touch with all sections of our country and with two of the island groups that have lately come under our jurisdiction, whose people must look to agriculture as a livelihood. It is searching the world for grains, grasses, fruits, and vegetables specially fitted for introduction into localities in the several States and Territories where they may add materially to our resources. By scientific attention to soil survey and possible new crops, to breeding of new varieties of plants, to experimental shipments, to animal industry and applied chemistry, very practical aid has been given our farming and stock-growing interests. The products of the farm have taken an unprecedented place in our export trade during the year that has just closed.

Public opinion throughout the United States has moved steadily toward a just appreciation of the value of forests, whether planted or of natural growth. The great part played by them in the creation and maintenance of the national wealth is now more fully repliced them are not before the control of the part of the part of the national wealth is now more fully realized than ever before.

Wise forest protection does not mean the withdrawal of forest resources, whether of wood, water, or grass, from contributing their full share to the welfare of the people, but, on the contrary, gives the assurance of larger and more certain supplies. The fundamental idea of forestry is the perpetuation of forests by use. Forest protection is not an end of itself; it is a means to increase and spatial the resources of our country and the industries which and sustain the resources of our country and the industries which depend upon them. The preservation of our forests is an imperative business necessity. We have come to see clearly that whatever destroys the forest, except to make way for agriculture, threatens our well-being.

The practical usefulness of the national forest reserves to the mining, grazing, irrigation, and other interests of the regions in which the reserves lie has led to a widespread demand by the people of the West for their protection and extension. The forest reserves will inevitably be of still greater use in the future than in the past. Additions should be made to them whenever practicable, and their usefulness should be increased by a thoroughly business-like management.

At present the protection of the forest reserves rests with the General Land Office, the mapping and description of their timber with the United States Geological Survey, and the preparation of plans for their conservative use with the Bureau of Forestry, which is also charged with the general advancement of practical forestry in the United States. These various functions should be united in the Bureau of Forestry, to which they properly belong. The present diffusion of responsibility is bad from every standpoint. It prevents that effective cooperation between the Government and the men who utilize the resources of the reserves, without which the interests of both must suffer. The scientific bureaus generally should be put under the Department of Agribureaus generally should be put under the Department of Agri-culture. The President should have by law the power of transferring lands for use as forest reserves to the Department of Agriculture. He already has such power in the case of lands needed by the Departments of War and the Navy.

The wise administration of the forest reserves will be not less helpful to the interests which depend on water than to those which depend on wood and grass. The water supply itself depends upon the forest. In the arid region it is water, not land, which measures production. The wastern half of the United Statement of Agriculture. The western half of the United States would sustain a population greater than that of our whole country to-day if the waters that now run to waste were saved and used for irrigation. The forest and water problems are perhaps the most vital internal questions of the United States.

Certain of the forest reserves should also be made preserves for the wild forest creatures. All of the reserves should be better protected from fires. Many of them need special protection be-cause of the great injury done by live stock, above all by sheep. The increase in deer, elk, and other animals in the Yellowstone Park shows what may be expected when other mountain forests are properly protected by law and properly guarded. Some of these areas have been so denuded of surface vegetation by overgrazing that the ground breeding birds, including grouse and quail, and many mammals, including deer, have been exterminated or driven away. At the same time the water-storing capacity of the surface has been decreased or destroyed, thus promoting floods in times of rain and diminishing the flow of streams between rains. In cases where natural conditions have been restored for a few years, vegetation has again carpeted the ground, birds and deer are coming back, and hundreds of persons, especially from the immediate neighborhood, come each summer to enjoy the privi-lege of camping. Some at least of the forest reserves should afford perpetual protection to the native fauna and flora, safe havens of refuge to our rapidly diminishing wild animals of the larger kinds, and free camping grounds for the ever-increasing numbers of men and women who have learned to find rest, health, and recreation in the splendid forests and flower-clad meadows of our mountains. The forest reserves should be set apart forever for the use and benefit of our people as a whole and not sacrificed to the shortsighted greed of a few.

The forests are natural reservoirs. By restraining the streams in flood and replenishing them in drought they make possible the use of waters otherwise wasted. They prevent the soil from washing, and so protect the storage reservoirs from filling up with silt. Forest conservation is therefore an essential condition of water conservation.

The forests alone cannot, however, fully regulate and conserve the waters of the arid region. Great storage works are necessary to equalize the flow of streams and to save the flood waters. Their construction has been conclusively shown to be an undertaking too vast for private effort. Nor can it be best accomplished by the individual States acting alone. Far-reaching interstate problems are involved; and the resources of single States would often be inadequate. It is properly a national function, at least in some of its features. It is as right for the National Government to make the streams and rivers of the arid region useful by engineering works for water storage as to make useful the rivers and harbors of the humid region by engineering works of another kind. The storing of the floods in reservoirs at the headwaters of our rivers is but an enlargement of our present policy of river control, under which levees are built on the lower reaches of the same streams.

The Government should construct and maintain these reservoirs as it does other public works. Where their purpose is to regulate the flow of streams, the water should be turned freely into the channels in the dry season to take the same course under the same laws as the natural flow.

The reclamation of the unsettled arid public lands presents a different problem. Here it is not enough to regulate the flow of streams. The object of the Government is to dispose of the land to settlers who will build homes upon it. To accomplish this object water must be brought within their reach.

The pioneer settlers on the arid public domain chose their homes

The pioneer settlers on the arid public domain chose their homes along streams from which they could themselves divert the water to reclaim their holdings. Such opportunities are practically gone. There remain, however, vast areas of public land which can be made available for homestead settlement, but only by reservoirs and main-line canals impracticable for private enterprise. These irrigation works should be built by the National Government. The lands reclaimed by them should be reserved by the Government for actual settlers, and the cost of construction should so far as possible be repaid by the land reclaimed. The distribution of the water, the division of the streams among irrigators, should be left to the settlers themselves in conformity irrigators, should be left to the settlers themselves in conformity with State laws and without interference with those laws or with vested rights. The policy of the National Government should be to aid irrigation in the several States and Territories in such manner as will enable the people in the local communities to help themselves, and as will stimulate needed reforms in the State laws and regulations governing irrigation.

The reclamation and settlement of the arid lands will enrich The rectamation and settlement of the arid lands will enrich every portion of our country, just as the settlement of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys brought prosperity to the Atlantic States. The increased demand for manufactured articles will stimulate industrial production, while wider home markets and the trade of Asia will consume the larger food supplies and effectually prevent Western competition with Eastern agriculture. Indeed, the products of irrigation will be consumed chiefly in upbuilding local expressions and other industries, which would otherwise centers of mining and other industries, which would otherwise not come into existence at all. Our people as a whole will profit, for successful home-making is but another name for the upbuild-

The necessary foundation has already been laid for the inauguration of the policy just described. It would be unwise to begin by doing too much, for a great deal will doubtless be learned, both as to what can and what can not be safely attempted, by the both as to what can and what can not be safely attempted, by the early efforts, which must of necessity be partly experimental in character. At the very beginning the Government should make clear, beyond shadow of doubt, its intention to pursue this policy on lines of the broadest public interest. No reservoir or canal should ever be built to satisfy selfish personal or local interests, but only in accordance with the advice of trained experts, after long investigation has shown the locality where all the conditions combine to make the work most needed and fraught with the greatest usefulness to the community as a whole. There should be no extravagance, and the believers in the need of irrigation will most benefit their cause by seeing to it that it is free from the least taint of excessive or reckless expenditure of the public

Whatever the Nation does for the extension of irrigation should harmonize with, and tend to improve, the condition of those now living on irrigated land. We are not at the starting point of this development. Over two hundred millions of private capital has already been expended in the construction of irrigation works, and many million acres of arid land reclaimed. A high degree of enterprise and ability has been shown in the work itself; but as much cannot be said in reference to the laws relating thereto. The security and value of the homes created depend largely on the stability of titles to water; but the majority of these rest on the uncertain foundation of court decisions rendered in ordinary suits at law. With a few creditable exceptions, the arid States have failed to provide for the certain and just division of streams in times of scarcity. Lax and uncertain laws have made it pos-sible to establish rights to water in excess of actual uses or necessities, and many streams have already passed into private owner-ship, or a control equivalent to ownership.

Whoever controls a stream practically controls the land it ren-ders productive, and the doctrine of private ownership of water

ders productive, and the doctrine of private ownership of water apart from land cannot prevail without causing enduring wrong. The recognition of such ownership, which has been permitted to grow up in the arid regions, should give way to a more enlightened and larger recognition of the rights of the public in the control and disposal of the public water supplies. Laws founded upon conditions obtaining in humid regions, where water is too abundant to justify hoarding it, have no proper application in a days country.

In the arid States the only right to water which should be recognized is that of use. In irrigation this right should attach to the land reclaimed and be inseparable therefrom. Granting perpetual water rights to others than users, without compensation to the public, is open to all the objections which apply to giving away perpetual franchises to the public utilities of cities. A few of the Western States have already recognized this, and have incorporated in their constitutions the doctrine of perpetual State ownership of water.

The benefits which have followed the unaided development of the past justify the Nation's aid and cooperation in the more difficult and important work yet to be accomplished. Laws so vitally affecting homes as those which control the water supply will only be effective when they have the sanction of the irrigators; reforms can only be final and satisfactory when they come through the enlightenment of the people most concerned. The larger development which national aid insures should, however, awaken in every arid State the determination to make its irrigation system equal in justice and effectiveness that of any country in the civilized world. Nothing could be more unwise than for isolated communities to continue to learn everything experimentally, instead of profiting by what is known elsewhere. We are dealing with a new and momentous question, in the pregnant years while insti-tutions are forming, and what we do will affect not only the present but future generations.

Our aim should be not simply to reclaim the largest area of land and provide homes for the largest number of people, but to create for this new industry the best possible social and industrial conditions; and this requires that we not only understand the existing situation, but avail ourselves of the best experience of the time in the solution of its problems. A careful study should be made, both by the Nation and the States, of the irrigation laws and conditions here and abroad. Ultimately it will probably be necessary for the Nation to cooperate with the several arid States in proportion as these States by their legislation and administration show themselves fit to receive it.

In Hawaii our aim must be to develop the Territory on the tra-ditional American lines. We do not wish a region of large estates ditional American lines. We do not wish a region of large estates tilled by cheap labor; we wish a healthy American community of men who themselves till the farms they own. All our legislation for the islands should be shaped with this end in view; the well-being of the average home-maker must afford the true test of the healthy development of the islands. The land policy should as nearly as possible be modeled on our homestead system.

It is a pleasure to say that it is hardly more necessary to report as to Porto Rico than as to any State or Territory within our continental limits. The island is thriving as never before, and it is being administered efficiently and honestly. Its people are now enjoying liberty and order under the protection of the United States, and upon this fact we congratulate them and ourselves. Their material welfare must be as carefully and jealously con-Their material welfare must be as carefully and jealously considered as the welfare of any other portion of our country. We have given them the great gift of free access for their products to the markets of the United States. I ask the attention of the Congress to the need of legislation concerning the public lands of Porto Rico.

In Cuba such progress has been made toward putting the independent government of the island upon a firm footing that before the present session of the Congress closes this will be an accomplished fact. Cuba will then start as her own mistress; and to the beautiful Queen of the Antilles, as she unfolds this new page of her destiny, we extend our heartiest greetings and good wishes. Elsewhere I have discussed the question of reciprocity. In the case of Cuba, however, there are weighty reasons of morality and of national interest why the policy should be held to have a peculiar application, and I most earnestly ask your attention to the wisdom, indeed to the vital need, of providing for a substantial reduction in the tariff duties on Cuban imports into the United States. Cuba has in her constitution affirmed what we desired, that she should stand, in international matters, in closer and more friendly relations with us than with any other power; and we are bound by every consideration of honor and expediency to pass commercial measures in the interest of her material wellbeing.

In the Philippines our problem is larger. They are very rich tropical islands, inhabited by many varying tribes, representing widely different stages of progress toward civilization. Our earwidely different stages of progress toward civilization. Our earnest effort is to help these people upward along the stony and difficult path that leads to self-government. We hope to make our administration of the islands honorable to our Nation by making it of the highest benefit to the Filipinos themselves; and as an earnest of what we intend to do, we point to what we have done. Already a greater measure of material prosperity and of governmental honesty and efficiency has been attained in the Philippines

It is no light task for a nation to achieve the temperamental qualities without which the institutions of free government are but an empty mockery. Our people are now successfully governing themselves, because for more than a thousand years they have been slowly fitting themselves, sometimes consciously, sometimes unconsciously, toward this end. What has taken us thirty generations to achieve, we cannot expect to see another race accomplish out of hand, especially when large portions of that accomplish out of hand, especially when large portions of that race start very far behind the point which our ancestors had reached even thirty generations ago. In dealing with the Philippine people we must show both patience and strength, forbearance and steadfast resolution. Our aim is high. We do not desire to do for the islanders merely what has elsewhere been done for tropic peoples by even the best foreign governments. We hope to do for them what has never before been done for any people of the tracies, to make them for foreign governments. people of the tropics—to make them fit for self-government after the fashion of the really free nations.

History may safely be challenged to show a single instance in which a masterful race such as ours, having been forced by the exigencies of war to take possession of an alien land, has behaved to its inhabitants with the disinterested zeal for their progress that our people have shown in the Philippines. To leave the islands at this time would mean that they would fall into a welter of murderous anarchy. Such desertion of duty on our part would be a crime against humanity. The character of Governor Taft and of his associates and subordinates is a proof, if such be needed, of the sincerity of our effort to give the islanders a constantly increasing measure of self-government exactly as fast as they show themselves fit to exercise it. Since the civil government was established not an appointment has been made in the islands with any reference to considerations of political influence, islands with any reference to considerations of political influence, or aught else save the fitness of the man and the needs of the

In our anxiety for the welfare and progress of the Philippines, it may be that here and there we have gone too rapidly in giving them local self-government. It is on this side that our error, if any, has been committed. No competent observer, sincerely desirous of finding out the facts and influenced only by a desire for the welfare of the natives, can assert that we have not gone far the welfare of the natives, can assert that we have not gone far enough. We have gone to the very verge of safety in hastening the process. To have taken a single step farther or faster in advance would have been folly and weakness, and might well have been crime. We are extremely anxious that the natives shall show the power of governing themselves. We are anxious, first for their sakes, and next, because it relieves us of a great burden. There need not be the slightest fear of our not continuing to give them all the liberty for which they are fit. them all the liberty for which they are fit.

The only fear is lest in our overanxiety we give them a degree of independence for which they are unfit, thereby inviting reaction and disaster. As fast as there is any reasonable hope that in a given district the people can govern themselves, self-government has been given in that district. There is not a locality fitted for self-government which has not received it. But it may well be that in certain cases it will have to be withdrawn because the inhabitants show themselves unfit to everyise it; such instances inhabitants show themselves unfit to exercise it; such instances have already occurred. In other words, there is not the slightest chance of our failing to show a sufficiently humanitarian spirit. The danger comes in the opposite direction.

There are still troubles ahead in the islands. The insurrection has become an affair of local banditti and marauders, who deserve no higher regard than the brigands of portions of the Old World. Encouragement, direct or indirect, to these insurrectos stands on the same footing as encouragement to hostile Indians in the days when we still had Indian wars. Exactly as our aim is to give to the Indian who remains peaceful the fullest and amplest consideration, but to have it understood that we will show no weakness if he goes on the warpath, so we must make it evident, unless we are false to our own traditions and to the demands of civilization and humanity, that while we will do everything in our power for the Filipino who is peaceful, we will take the sternest measures with the Filipino who follows the path of the insurrecto and the

The heartiest praise is due to large numbers of the natives of the islands for their steadfast loyalty. The Macabebes have been conspicuous for their courage and devotion to the flag. I recom-conspicuous for their courage and devotion to the flag. I recommend that the Secretary of War be empowered to take some systematic action in the way of aiding those of these men who are crippled in the service and the families of those who are killed. The time has come when there should be additional legislation for the Philippines. Nothing better can be done for the islands than to introduce industrial enterprises. Nothing would benefit them so much as throwing them open to industrial development. The connection between idleness and mischief is proverbial, and the opportunity to do remunerative work is one of the surest preventives of war. Of course no husiness man will go into the ventives of war. Of course no business man will go into the Philippines unless it is to his interest to do so; and it is immensely to the interest of the islands that he should go in. It is therefore necessary that the Congress should pass laws by which the resources of the islands can be developed; so that franchises (for limited terms of years) can be granted to companies doing business in them, and every encouragement be given to the incoming

Not to permit this is to do a wrong to the Philippines. The franchises must be granted and the business permitted only under regulations which will guarantee the islands against any kind of improper exploitation. But the vast natural wealth of the islands must be developed, and the capital willing to develop it must be given the opportunity. The field must be thrown open to individual enterprise, which has been the real factor in the development of every region over which our flag has flown. It is urgently necessary to enact suitable laws dealing with general transportation, mining, banking, currency, homesteads, and the use and ownership of the lands and timber. These laws will give free play to industrial enterprise; and the commercial development which will surely follow will afford to the people of the islands the best proofs of the sincerity of our desire to aid them.

I call your attention most earnestly to the crying need of a cable to Hawaii and the Philippines, to be continued from the Philippines to points in Asia. We should not defer a day longer than necessary the construction of such a cable. It is demanded not merely for commercial but for political and military considerations ations

Either the Congress should immediately provide for the construction of a Government cable, or else an arrangement should be made by which like advantages to those accruing from a Government cable may be secured to the Government by contract with a private cable company.

on this continent is of such consequence to the American people as the building of a canal across the Isthmus connecting North and South America. Its importance to the Nation is by no means limited merely to its material effects upon our business prosperity; and yet with view to these effects alone it would be to the last degree important for us immediately to begin it. While its beneficial effects would perhaps be most marked upon the Pacific Coast and the Gulf and South Atlantic States, it would also greatly benefit other sections. It is emphatically a work which it is for the interest of the entire country to begin and complete as soon as possible; it is one of those great works which only a great na-tion can undertake with prospects of success, and which when done are not only permanent assets in the nation's material inter-ests, but standing monuments to its constructive ability.

I am glad to be able to announce to you that our negotiations on this subject with Great Britain, conducted on both sides in a spirit of friendliness and mutual good will and respect, have resulted in my being able to lay before the Senate a treaty which if ratified will enable us to begin preparations for an Isthmian canal at any time, and which guarantees to this Nation every right that it has ever asked in connection with the canal. In this treaty, the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty, so long recognized as inadequate to supply the base for the construction and maintenance of a necessarily American ship canal, is abrogated. It specifically provides that the United States alone shall do the work of building and assume the responsibility of safeguarding the canal and shall regulate its neutral use by all nations on terms of equality without the guaranty or interference of any outside nation from any quarter. The signed treaty will at once be laid before the Senate, and if approved the Congress can then proceed to give effect to the advantages it secures us by providing for the building of the canal. treaty, the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty, so long recognized as inadThe true end of every great and free people should be self-respecting peace; and this Nation most earnestly desires sincere and cordial friendship with all others. Over the entire world, of recent years, wars between the great civilized powers have become less and less frequent. Wars with barbarous and semi-barbarous peoples come in an entirely different category, being merely a most regrettable but necessary international police duty which must be performed for the sake of the welfare of mankind. Peace can only be kept with certainty where both sides wish to keep it; but more and more the civilized peoples are realizing the wicked folly of war and are attaining that condition of just and intelligent regard for the rights of others which will in the end, as we hope and believe, make world-wide peace possible. The peace conference at The Hague gave definite expression to this hope and belief and marked a stride toward their attainment. This same peace conference acquiesced in our statement of the conference.

This same peace conference acquiesced in our statement of the Monroe Doctrine as compatible with the purposes and aims of the

The Monroe Doctrine should be the cardinal feature of the foreign policy of all the nations of the two Americas, as it is of the United States. Just seventy-eight years have passed since President Monroe in his Annual Message announced that "The American continents are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power." In other words, the Monroe Doctrine is a declaration that there must be no territorial aggrandizement by any non-American power at the expense of any American power on American soil. It is in no wise intended as hostile to any nation in the Old World. Still less is it intended as nostile to any nation in the Old World. Still less is it incented to give cover to any aggression by one New World power at the expense of any other. It is simply a step, and a long step, toward assuring the universal peace of the world by securing the possibility of permanent peace on this hemisphere.

During the past century other influences have established the permanence and independence of the smaller states of Europe. Through the Monroe Doctrine we hope to be able to safeguard like independence and secure like permanence for the lesser among the New World nations.

This doctrine has nothing to do with the commercial relations This doctrine has nothing to do with the commercial relations of any American power, save that it in truth allows each of them to form such as it desires. In other words, it is really a guaranty of the commercial independence of the Americas. We do not ask under this doctrine for any exclusive commercial dealings with any other American state. We do not guarantee any state against punishment if it misconducts itself, provided that punishment does not take the form of the acquisition of territory by any non-American power.

Our attitude in Cuba is a sufficient guaranty of our own good faith. We have not the slightest desire to secure any territory at the expense of any of our neighbors. We wish to work with them hand in hand, so that all of us may be uplifted together, and we rejoice over the good fortune of any of them, we gladly hail their material prosperity and political stability, and are concerned and alarmed if any of them fall into industrial or political chaos. We do not wish to see any Old World military power grow up on this continent, or to be compelled to become a military power our-selves. The peoples of the Americas can prosper best if left to

The work of upbuilding the Navy must be steadily continued. No one point of our policy, foreign or domestic, is more important than this to the honor and material welfare, and above all to the peace, of our Nation in the future. Whether we desire it or not, we must henceforth recognize that we have international duties no less than international rights. Even if our flag were hauled down in the Philippines and Porto Rico, even if we decided not to build the Isthmian Canal, we should need a thoroughly trained Navy of adequate size, or else be prepared definitely and for all time to abandon the idea that our Nation is among those whose sons go down to the sea in ships. Unless our commerce is always to be carried in foreign bottoms, we must have war craft to pro-

Inasmuch, however, as the American people have no thought of abandoning the path upon which they have entered, and especially in view of the fact that the building of the Isthmian Canal is fast becoming one of the matters which the whole people are united in demanding, it is imperative that our Navy should be put and kept in the highest state of efficiency, and should be made to answer to our growing needs. So far from being in any way a provocation to war, an adequate and highly trained navy is the best guaranty against war, the cheapest and most effective peace insurance. The cost of building and maintaining such a navy represents the very lightest premium for insuring peace which this Nation can possibly pay.

Probably no other great nation in the world is so anxious for peace as we are. There is not a single civilized power which has Inasmuch, however, as the American people have no thought of peace as we are. There is not a single civilized power which has anything whatever to fear from aggressiveness on our part. All we want is peace; and toward this end we wish to be able to secure the same respect for our rights from others which we are eager and anxious to extend to their rights in return, to insure fair treatment to us commercially, and to guarantee the safety of the American

Our people intend to abide by the Monroe Doctrine and to insist upon it as the one sure means of securing the peace of the West-ern Hemisphere. The Navy offers us the only means of making our insistence upon the Monroe Doctrine anything but a subject of derision to whatever nation chooses to disregard it. We desire the peace which comes as of right to the just man armed; not the peace granted on terms of ignominy to the craven and the weakling.

It is not possible to improvise a navy after war breaks out. The ships must be built and the men trained long in advance. Some auxiliary vessels can be turned into makeshifts which will do in default of any better for the minor work, and a proportion of raw men can be mixed with the highly trained, their shortcomings being made good by the skill of their fellows; but the efficient fighting force of the Navy when pitted against an equal opponent will be found almost exclusively in the war ships that have been regularly built and in the officers and men who through years of faithful performance of sea duty have been trained to handle their formidable but complex and delicate weapons with the highest efficiency. In the late war with Spain the ships that dealt the decisive blows at Manila and Santiago had been launched from two to fourteen years, and they were able to do as they did because the men in the conning towers, the gun turrets, and the engine-rooms had through long years of practice at sea learned bow to do their duty. how to do their duty.

Our present Navy was begun in 1882. At that period our Navy consisted of a collection of antiquated wooden ships, already almost as out of place against modern war vessels as the galleys of Alcibiades and Hamilcar—certainly as the ships of Tromp and Blake. Nor at that time did we have men fit to handle a modern man-of-war. Under the wise legislation of the Congress and the man-or-war. Under the wise legislation of the Congress and the successful administration of a succession of patriotic Secretaries of the Navy, belonging to both political parties, the work of upbuilding the Navy went on, and ships equal to any in the world of their kind were continually added; and what was even more important, these ships were exercised at sea singly and in squadrons portant, these ships were exercised at sea singly and in squadrons until the men aboard them were able to get the best possible service out of them. The result was seen in the short war with Spain, which was decided with such rapidity because of the infinitely greater preparedness of our Navy than of the Spanish Navy.

While awarding the fullest honor to the men who actually commanded and manned the ships which destroyed the Spanish sea forces in the Philippines and in Cuba, we must not forget that an equal meed of praise belongs to those without whom neither blow could have been struck. The Congressmen who voted years in advance the money to lay down the ships, to build the guns to could have been struck. The Congressmen who voted years in advance the money to lay down the ships, to build the guns, to buy the armor-plate; the Department officials and the business men and wage-workers who furnished what the Congress had authorized; the Secretaries of the Navy who asked for and expended the appropriations; and finally the officers who, in fair weather and foul, on actual sea service, trained and disciplined the crews of the ships when there was no war in sight—all are entitled to a full share in the glory of Manila and Santiago, and the respect accorded by every true American to those who wrought such signal triumph for our country. It was forethought and preparation which secured us the overwhelming triumph of 1898. If we fail to show forethought and preparation now, there may come a time when disaster will befall us instead of triumph; and should this time come, the fault will rest primarily, not upon those whom the accident of events puts in supreme command at the moment, but

There should be no cessation in the work of completing our Navy. So far ingenuity has been wholly unable to devise a substitute for the great war craft whose hammering guns beat out the mastery of the high seas. It is unsafe and unwise not to provide this year for several additional battle ships and heavy vide this year for several additional battle ships and heavy armored cruisers, with auxiliary and lighter craft in proportion; for the exact numbers and character I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Navy. But there is something we need even more than additional ships, and this is additional officers and men. To provide battle ships and cruisers and then lay them up, with the expectation of leaving them unmanned until they are needed in actual war, would be worse than folly; it would be a crime against the Nation.

To send any war ship against a competent enemy unless those aboard it have been trained by years of actual sea service, including incessant gunnery practice, would be to invite not merely disaster, but the bitterest shame and humiliation. Four thousand additional seamen and one thousand additional marines should be provided; and an increase in the officers should be provided by making a large addition to the classes at Annap-olis. There is one small matter which should be mentioned in connection with Annapolis. The pretentious and unmeaning title of "naval cadet" should be abolished; the title of "midshipman,"

Even in time of peace a war ship should be used until it wears out, for only so can it be kept fit to respond to any emergency. The officers and men alike should be kept as much as possible on blue water, for it is there only they can learn their duties as they should be learned. The big vessels should be manœuvred in squadrons containing not merely battle ships, but the necessary proportion of cruisers and scouts. The torpedo boats should be handled by the younger officers in such manner as will best fit the latter to take responsibility and meet the emergencies of

Every detail ashore which can be performed by a civilian should be so performed, the officer being kept for his special duty in the sea service. Above all, gunnery practice should be unceasing. It is important to have our Navy of adequate size, but it is even more important that ship for ship it should equal in efficiency any navy in the world. This is possible only with highly drilled crews and officers, and this in turn imperatively demands continuous and progressive instruction in target practice, ship handling, squadron tactics, and general discipline. Our ships must be assembled in squadrons actively crusing away from harbors and never long at anchor. The resulting wear upon engines and hulls must be endured; a battle ship worn out in long training of officers and men is well paid for by the results, while, on the other hand, no matter in how excellent condition, it is useless if the hand, no matter in how excellent condition, it is useless if the crew be not expert.

We now have seventeen battle ships appropriated for, of which nine are completed and have been commissioned for actual service. The remaining eight will be ready in from two to four years, but it will take at least that time to recruit and train the men to fight them. It is of vast concern that we have trained crews ready for the vessels by the time they are commissioned. Good ships and good guns are simply good weapons, and the best weapons are useless save in the hands of men who know how to fight with them. The men must be trained and drilled under a thorough and well-planned system of progressive instruction, while the recruiting must be carried on with still greater vigor. Every effort must be made to exalt the main function of the officer-the command of men. The leading graduates of the Naval Academy should be assigned to the combatant branches,

Many of the essentials of success are already recognized by the Many of the essentials of success are already recognized by the General Board, which, as the central office of a growing staff, is moving steadily toward a proper war efficiency and a proper efficiency of the whole Navy, under the Secretary. This General Board, by fostering the creation of a general staff, is providing for the official and then the general recognition of our altered conditions as a Nation and of the true meaning of a great war fleet, which meaning is, first, the best men, and, second, the best

The Naval Militia forces are State organizations, and are trained for coast service, and in event of war they will constitute the inner line of defense. They should receive hearty encouragement from the General Government.

But in addition we should at once provide for a National Naval Reserve, organized and trained under the direction of the Navy Department, and subject to the call of the Chief Executive whenever war becomes imminent. It should be a real auxiliary to the naval seagoing peace establishment, and offer material to be drawn on at once for manning our ships in time of war. It should be composed of graduates of the Naval Academy, graduates of the Naval Militia, officers and crews of coast-line steamers, longshore schooners, fishing vessels, and steam yachts, together with the coast population about such centers as life-saving stations and

The American people must either build and maintain an adequate navy or else make up their minds definitely to accept a secondary position in international affairs, not merely in political, but in commercial matters. It has been well said that there is no surer way of courting national disaster than to be "opulent,

It is not necessary to increase our Army beyond its present size at this time. But it is necessary to keep it at the highest point of efficiency. The individual units who as officers and enlisted men efficiency. The individual units who as officers and enlisted men compose this Army are, we have good reason to believe, at least as efficient as those of any other army in the entire world. It is our duty to see that their training is of a kind to insure the highest possible expression of power to these units when acting in combination.

The conditions of modern war are such as to make an infinitely heavier demand than ever before upon the individual character and capacity of the officer and the enlisted man, and to make it far more difficult for men to act together with effect. At present the fighting must be done in extended order, which means that each man must act for himself and at the same time act in combination with others with whom he is no longer in the old-fashioned elbow-to-elbow touch. Under such conditions a few men of the highest excellence are worth more than many men without the special skill which is only found as the result of special train-ing applied to men of exceptional physique and morale. But nowadays the most valuable fighting man and the most difficult to perfect is the rifleman who is also a skillful and daring rider.

The proportion of our cavalry regiments has wisely been increased. The American cavalryman, trained to manœuvre and fight with equal facility on foot and on horseback, is the best type of soldier for general purposes now to be found in the world. The ideal cavalryman of the present day is a man who can fight on foot as effectively as the best infantryman, and who is in addition unsurpassed in the care and management of his horse and

A general staff should be created. As for the present staff and supply departments, they should be filled by details from the line, the men so detailed returning after a while to their line duties. It is very undesirable to have the senior grades of the Army composed of men who have come to fill the positions by the mere fact of seniority. A system should be adopted by which there shall be an elimination grade by grade of those who seem unfit to render the best service in the next grade. Justice to the veterans of the Civil War who are still in the Army would seem to require that in the matter of retirements they be given by law the same that in the matter of retirements they be given by law the same privileges accorded to their comrades in the Navy.

The process of elimination of the least fit should be conducted The process of elimination of the least it should be conducted in a manner that would render it practically impossible to apply political or social pressure on behalf of any candidate, so that each man may be judged purely on his own merits. Pressure for the promotion of civil officials for political reasons is bad enough, but it is tenfold worse where applied on behalf of officers of the Army or Navy. Every promotion and every detail under the War Department must be made solely with regard to the good of the service and to the capacity and merit of the man himself. No pressure, political, social, or personal, of any kind, will be permitted to exercise the least effect in any question of promotion or detail; and if there is reason to believe that such pressure is exercised at the instigation of the officer concerned, it will be held to militate against him. In our Army we cannot afford to have rewards or duties distributed save on the simple ground that those who by their own merits are entitled to the rewards get them, and that those who are peculiarly fit to do the duties are chosen to perform them.

Every effort should be made to bring the Army to a constantly increasing state of efficiency. When on actual service no work save that directly in the line of such service should be required. The paper work in the Army, as in the Navy, should be greatly reduced. What is needed is proved power of command and capacity to work well in the field. Constant care is necessary to prevent dry rot in the transportation and commissary departments.

Our Army is so small and so much scattered that it is very difficult to give the higher officers (as well as the lower officers and ncut to give the higher officers (as well as the lower officers and the enlisted men) a chance to practice manœuvres in mass and on a comparatively large scale. In time of need no amount of individual excellence would avail against the paralysis which would follow inability to work as a coherent whole, under skillful and daring leadership. The Congress should provide means whereby it will be possible to have field exercises by at least a division of regulars, and if possible also a division of national guardsmen, once a year. These exercises might take the form of field manœuvres; or, if on the Gulf Coast or the Pacific or Atlantic Seaboard vres; or, if on the Gulf Coast or the Pacific or Atlantic Seaboard, or in the region of the Great Lakes, the army corps when assembled could be marched from some inland point to some point on the water, there embarked, disembarked after a couple of days' journey at some other point, and again marched inland. Only by actual handling and providing for men in masses while they are marching, camping, embarking, and disembarking, will it be possible to train the higher officers to perform their duties well

A great debt is owing from the public to the men of the Army and Navy. They should be so treated as to enable them to reach the highest point of efficiency, so that they may be able to respond instantly to any demand made upon them to sustain the interests of the Nation and the honor of the flag. The individual American enlisted man is probably on the whole a more formidable fighting man than the regular of any other army. Every dable fighting man than the regular of any other army. Every consideration should be shown him, and in return the highest standard of usefulness should be exacted from him. It is well worth while for the Congress to consider whether the pay of enlisted men upon second and subsequent enlistments should not be increased to correspond with the increased value of the veteran

Much good has already come from the act reorganizing the Army, passed early in the present year. The three prime reforms, all of them of literally inestimable value, are, first, the substitution of four-year details from the line for permanent appointments in the so-called staff divisions; second, the establishment of a corps of artillery with a chief at the head; third, the establishment of a maximum and minimum limit for the Army. would be difficult to overestimate the improvement in the effi-ciency of our Army which these three reforms are making, and have in part already effected.

The reorganization provided for by the act has been substantially accomplished. The improved conditions in the Philippines have enabled the War Department materially to reduce the military charge upon our revenue and to arrange the number of soldiers so as to bring this number much nearer to the minimum than to the maximum limit established by law. There is, however, need of supplementary legislation. Thorough military education must be provided, and in addition to the regulars the advantages of this education should be given to the officers of the National Guard and others in civil life who desire intelligently to fit themselves for possible military duty. The officers should be given the chance to perfect themselves by study in the higher branches of this art. At West Point the education should be of the kind most apt to turn out men who are good in actual field service; too much stress should not be laid on mathematics, nor should proficiency therein be held to establish the right of entry to a corps d'élite. The typical American officer of the best kind need not be a good mathematician; but he must be able to master himself, to control others, and to show boldness and fertility of resource in every emergency.

Action should be taken in reference to the militia and to the raising of volunteer forces. Our militia law is obsolete and worthless. The organization and armament of the National Guard of the several States, which are treated as militia in the appropriations by the Congress, should be made identical with those provided for the regular forces. The obligations and duties of the Guard in time of war should be carefully defined, and a system of the congress of established by law under which the method of procedure of raising volunteer forces should be prescribed in advance. It is utterly impossible in the excitement and haste of impending war to do this satisfactorily if the arrangements have not been made long beforehand. Provision should be made for utilizing in the first volunteer organizations called out the training of those citizens who have already had experience under arms, and especially for the selection in advance of the officers of any force which may be raised; for careful selection of the kind necessary is impossible

That the Army is not at all a mere instrument of destruction has been shown during the last three years. In the Philippines, Cuba, and Porto Rico it has proved itself a great constructive force, a most potent implement for the upbuilding of a peaceful civilization.

No other citizens deserve so well of the Republic as the veterans, the survivors of those who saved the Union. They did the one deed which if left undone would have meant that all else in our history went for nothing. But for their steadfast prowess in the greatest crisis of our history, all our annals would be meaningless, and our great experiment in popular freedom and selfgovernment a gloomy failure. Moreover, they not only left us a united Nation, but they left us also as a heritage the memory of the mighty deeds by which the Nation was kept united. We are now indeed one Nation, one in fact as well as in name; we are united in our devotion to the flag which is the symbol of national greatness and unity; and the very completeness of our union enables us all, in every part of the country, to glory in the valor shown alike by the sons of the North and the sons of the South in the times that tried men's souls.

The men who in the last three years have done so well in the East and the West Indies and on the mainland of Asia have shown that this remembrance is not lost. In any serious crisis the United States must rely for the great mass of its fighting men upon the volunteer soldiery who do not make a permanent profession of the military career; and whenever such a crisis arises the deathless memories of the Civil War will give to Americans the lift of lofty purpose which comes to those whose fathers have stood valiantly in the forefront of the battle.

The merit system of making appointments is in its essence as democratic and American as the common school system itself. It simply means that in clerical and other positions where the duties are entirely non-political, all applicants should have a fair field and no favor, each standing on his merits as he is able to show them by practical test. Written competitive examinations offer the only available means in many cases for applying this system. In other cases, as where laborers are employed, a system of registration undoubtedly can be widely extended. There are, of course, places where the written competitive examination cannot be applied, and others where it offers by no means an ideal solution, but where under existing political conditions it is, though

Wherever the conditions have permitted the application of the merit system in its fullest and widest sense, the gain to the Government has been immense. The navy-yards and postal service illustrate, probably better than any other branches of the Government, the great gain in economy, efficiency, and honesty due to the enforcement of this principle.

I recommend the passage of a law which will extend the classified service to the District of Columbia, or will at least enable the President thus to extend it. In my judgment all laws providing for the temporary employment of clerks should hereafter contain a provision that they be selected under the Civil Service Law.

It is important to have this system obtain at home, but it is even more important to have it applied rigidly in our insular possessions. Not an office should be filled in the Philippines or Porto Rico with any regard to the man's partisan affiliations or services, with any regard to the political, social, or personal influence which he may have at his command; in short, heed should be paid to absolutely nothing save the man's own character and capacity and the needs of the service.

The administration of these islands should be as wholly free from the suspicion of partisan politics as the administration of the Army and Navy. All that we ask from the public servant in the Philippines or Porto Rico is that he reflect honor on his country by the way in which he makes that country's rule a benefit to the peoples who have come under it. This is all that we should ask,

The merit system is simply one method of securing honest and efficient administration of the Government; and in the long run the sole justification of any type of government lies in its proving itself both honest and efficient.

The consular service is now organized under the provisions of a law passed in 1856, which is entirely inadequate to existing conditions. The interest shown by so many commercial bodies throughout the country in the reorganization of the service is heartily commended to your attention. Several bills providing for a new consular service have in recent years been submitted to the Congress. They are based upon the just principle that appointments to the service should be made only after a practical test of the applicant's fitness, that promotions should be governed by trustworthiness, adaptability, and zeal in the performance of duty, and that the tenure of office should be unaffected by partisan considerations.

The guardianship and fostering of our rapidly expanding for-eign commerce, the protection of American citzeins resorting to foreign countries in lawful pursuit of their affairs, and the maintenance of the dignity of the Nation abroad, combine to make it essential that our consuls should be men of character, knowledge, and enterprise. It is true that the service is now, in the main, efficient, but a standard of excellence cannot be permanently maintained until the principles set forth in the bills heretofore submitted to the Congress on this subject are enacted into law.

In my judgment the time has arrived when we should definitely make up our minds to recognize the Indian as an individual and not as a member of a tribe. The General Allotment Act is a mighty pulverizing engine to break up the tribal mass. It acts directly upon the family and the individual. Under its provisions some sixty thousand Indians have already become citizens of the United States. We should now break up the tribal funds, doing for them what allotment does for the tribal lands; that is, they should be divided into individual holdings. There will be a transition period during which the funds will in many cases have to be held in trust. This is the case also with the lands. A stop should be put upon the indiscriminate permission to Indians to lease their allotments. The effort should be steadily to make the Indian work like any other man on his own ground. The marging land of the Indian work like any other man on his own ground. riage laws of the Indians should be made the same as those of the

In the schools the education should be elementary and largely industrial. The need of higher education among the Indians is very, very limited. On the reservations care should be taken to try to suit the teaching to the needs of the particular Indian. There is no use in attempting to induce agriculture in a country suited only for cattle raising, where the Indian should be made a stock grower. The ration system, which is merely the corral and the reservation system, is highly detrimental to the Indians. It promotes beggary, perpetuates pauperism, and stifles industry. It is an effectual barrier to progress. It must continue to a greater or less degree as long as tribes are herded on reservations and have everything in common. The Indian should be treated as an individual—like the white man. During the change of treatment inevitable hardships will occur; every effort should be made to minimize these hardships; but we should not because of them hesitate to make the change. There should be a continuous reduction in the number of agencies. In dealing with the aboriginal races few things are more important than to preserve them from the terrible physical and moral degradation resulting from the liquor traffic. We are doing all we can to save our own Indian tribes from this evil. Wherever by international agreement this same end can be attained as regards races where we do not possess exclusive control, every effort should be made to bring it about.

I bespeak the most cordial support from the Congress and the people for the St. Louis Exposition to Commemorate the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Louisiana Purchase. This purchase was the greatest instance of expansion in our history. It definitely decided that we were to become a great continental republic, by far the foremost power in the Western Hemisphere. It is one of three or four great landmarks in our history—the great turning points in our development. It is eminently fitting that all our people should join with heartiest good will in commemorating it, and the citizens of St. Louis, of Missouri, of all the adjacent region, are entitled to every aid in making the celebration a noteworthy event in our annals. We earnestly hope I bespeak the most cordial support from the Congress and the bration a noteworthy event in our annals. We earnestly hope that foreign nations will appreciate the deep interest our country takes in this Exposition, and our view of its importance from every standpoint, and that they will participate in securing its The National Government should be represented by a full and complete set of exhibits.

The people of Charleston, with great energy and civic spirit, are carrying on an Exposition which will continue throughout most of the present session of the Congress. I heartily commend this Exposition to the good will of the people. It deserves all the encouragement that can be given it. The managers of the Charleston Exposition have requested the Cabinet officers to place there at the Government exhibits which have been at Buffals promising to pay the peoples. falo, promising to pay the necessary expenses. I have taken the responsibility of directing that this be done, for I feel that it is due to Charleston to help her in her praiseworthy effort. In my opinion the management should not be required to pay all these expenses. I earnestly recommend that the Congress appropriate

The Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo has just closed. Both from the industrial and the artistic standpoint this Exposition has been in a high degree creditable and useful, not merely to Buffalo but to the United States. The terrible tragedy of the President's assassination interfered materially with its being a financial success. The exposition was peculiarly in harmony with the trend of our public policy, because it represented an effort to bring into closer touch all the peoples of the Western Femicals and give them an increasing sease of unity. Such Hemisphere, and give them an increasing sense of unity. Such an effort was a genuine service to the entire American public.

The advancement of the highest interests of national science results of scientific expeditions conducted by the United States have been committed to the Smithsonian Institution. In furtherance of its declared purpose—for the "increase and diffusion of knowledge among men"—the Congress has from time to time given it other important functions. Such trusts have been executed by the Institution with notable fidelity. There should be no halt in the work of the Institution, in accordance with the plans which its Secretary has presented, for the preservation of the vanishing races of great North American animals in the National Zoological Park. The urgent needs of the National Museum are recommended to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

Perhaps the most characteristic educational movement of the past fifty years is that which has created the modern public library and developed it into broad and active service. There are now over five thousand public libraries in the United States, the product of this period. In addition to accumulating material, they are also striving by organization, by improvement in method, and by cooperation, to give greater efficiency to the material they hold, to make it more widely useful, and by avoidance of unnecessary duplication in process to reduce the cost of its administration.

In these efforts they naturally look for assistance to the Federal library, which, though still the Library of Congress, and so entitled, is the one national library of the United States. Already the largest single collection of books on the Western Hemisphere, and certain to increase more rapidly than any other through purchase explanage and the operation of the converient law this chase, exchange, and the operation of the copyright law, this library has a unique opportunity to render to the libraries of this country—to American scholarship—service of the highest impor-tance. It is housed in a building which is the largest and most magnificent yet erected for library uses. Resources are now being provided which will develop the collection properly, equip it with the apparatus and service necessary to its effective use, render its bibliographic work widely available, and enable it to become, not merely a center of research, but the chief factor in great coopera-tive efforts for the diffusion of knowledge and the advancement of learning.

For the sake of good administration, sound economy, and the advancement of science, the Census Office as now constituted should be made a permanent Government bureau. This would insure better, cheaper, and more satisfactory work, in the interest not only of our business but of statistic, economic, and social

The remarkable growth of the postal service is shown in the fact that its revenues have doubled and its expenditures have nearly doubled within twelve years. Its progressive development compels constantly increasing outlay, but in this period of business energy and prosperity its receipts grow so much faster than its expenses that the annual deficit has been steadily reduced from $11,411,779 in 1897 to $3,923,727 in 1901. Among recent postal advances the success of rural free delivery wherever established has been so marked, and actual experience has made its benefits so plain, that the demand for its extension is general and urgent. It is just that the great agricultural population should share in the improvement of the service. The number of rural routes now in operation is 6,009, practically all established within three years, and there are 6,000 applications awaiting action. It is expected that the number in operation at the close of the current fiscal year will reach 8,600. The mail will then be daily carried to the doors of 5,700,000 of our people who have heretofore been dependent upon distant offices, and one-third of all that portion of the country which is adapted to it will be covered by this kind of

The full measure of postal progress which might be realized has long been hampered and obstructed by the heavy burden imposed on the Government through the intrenched and well-understood abuses which have grown up in connection with second-class mail matter. The extent of this burden appears when it is stated that while the second-class matter makes nearly three-fifths of the weight of all the mail, it paid for the last fiscal year only $4,294,445 of the aggregate postal revenue of $111,631,193. If the pound rate of postage, which produces the large loss thus entailed, and which was fixed by the Congress with the purpose of encouraging the dissemination of public information, were limited to the legitimate newspapers and periodicals actually contemplated by the law, no just exception could be taken. That expense would be the recognized and accepted cost of a liberal public policy deliberately adopted for a justifiable end. But much of the matter which enjoys the privileged rate is wholly outside of the intent of the law, and has secured admission only through an evasion of its requirements or through lax construction. The proportion of such wrongly included matter is estimated by postal experts to be one-half of the whole volume of second-class mail. If it be only one-third or one-quarter, the magnitude of the burden is apparent. The Post-Office Department has now undertaken to remove the abuses so The extent of this burden appears when it is stated that Office Department has now undertaken to remove the abuses so far as is possible by a stricter application of the law; and it should be sustained in its effort.

Owing to the rapid growth of our power and our interests on the Pacific, whatever happens in China must be of the keenest national concern to us.

The general terms of the settlement of the questions growing out of the antiforeign uprisings in China of 1900, having been formulated in a joint note addressed to China by the representaformulated in a joint note addressed to China by the representa-tives of the injured powers in December last, were promptly accepted by the Chinese Government. After protracted confer-ences the plenipotentiaries of the several powers were able to sign a final protocol with the Chinese plenipotentiaries on the 7th of last September, setting forth the measures taken by China in compliance with the demands of the joint note, and expressing their satisfaction therewith. It will be laid before the Congress, with a general of the planiesterious on behalf of the United with a report of the plenipotentiary on behalf of the United States, Mr. William Woodville Rockhill, to whom high praise is due for the tact, good judgment, and energy he has displayed in performing an exceptionally difficult and delicate task.

The agreement reached disposes in a manner satisfactory to the powers of the various grounds of complaint, and will contribute materially to better future relations between China and the pow-Reparation has been made by China for the murder of eigners during the uprising and punishment has been inflicted on the officials, however high in rank, recognized as responsible for or having participated in the outbreak. Official examinations have been forbidden for a period of five years in all cities in which foreigners have been murdered or cruelly treated, and edicts have been issued making all officials directly responsible for the future safety of foreigners and for the suppression of violence against

Provisions have been made for insuring the future safety of the foreign representatives in Peking by setting aside for their exclusive use a quarter of the city which the powers can make defensible and in which they can if necessary maintain permanent military guards; by dismantling the military works between the capital and the sea, and by allowing the temporary maintain and the sea, and by allowing the temporary maintains of for and the sea; and by allowing the temporary maintenance of for-eign military posts along this line. An edict has been issued by the Emperor of China prohibiting for two years the importation of arms and ammunition into China. China has agreed to pay adequate indemnities to the states, societies, and individuals for the losses sustained by them and for the expenses of the military expeditions sent by the various powers to protect life and restore order.

Under the provisions of the joint note of December, 1900, China has agreed to revise the treaties of commerce and navigation and to take such other steps for the purpose of facilitating foreign trade as the foreign powers may decide to be needed.

The Chinese Government has agreed to participate financially in the work of bettering the water approaches to Shanghai and to Tientsin, the centers of foreign trade in central and northern China, and an international conservancy board, in which the Chinese Government is largely represented, has been provided for the improvement of the Shanghai River and the control of its navigation. In the same line of commercial advantages a revision of the present tariff on imports has been assented to for the purpose of substituting specific for ad valorem duties, and an expert has been sent abroad on the part of the United States to assist in this work. A list of articles to remain free of duty, including flour, cereals, and rice, gold and silver coin and bullion, has also been agreed upon in the settlement.

During these troubles our Government has unswervingly advocated moderation, and has materially aided in bringing about an adjustment which tends to enhance the welfare of China and to lead to a more beneficial intercourse between the Empire and the modern world; while in the critical period of revolt and massacre we did our full share in safeguarding life and property, restoring order, and vindicating the national interest and honor. It behooves us to continue in these paths, doing what lies in our power to foster feelings of good will, and leaving no effort untried to work out the great policy of full and fair intercourse between China and the nations, on a footing of equal rights and advan-tages to all. We advocate the "open door" with all that it implies; not merely the procurement of enlarged commercial opportunities on the coasts, but access to the interior by the waterways with which China has been so extraordinarily favored. Only by bringing the people of China into peaceful and friendly community of trade with all the peoples of the earth can the work now auspiciously begun be carried to fruition. In the attainment of this purpose we necessarily claim parity of treatment, under the conventions, throughout the Empire for our trade and our citizens with those of all other powers.

the proceedings of the Pan-American Congress, convoked at the invitation of Mexico, and now sitting at the Mexican capital. The delegates of the United States are under the most liberal instruc-tions to cooperate with their colleagues in all matters promising advantage to the great family of American commonwealths, as well in their relations among themselves as in their domestic advancement and in their intercourse with the world at large

My predecessor communicated to the Congress the fact that the Weil and La Abra awards against Mexico have been adjudged by the highest courts of our country to have been obtained through fraud and perjury on the part of the claimants, and that in ac-cordance with the acts of the Congress the money remaining in the hands of the Secretary of State on these awards has been returned to Mexico. A considerable portion of the money received from Mexico on these awards had been paid by this Govern-ment to the claimants before the decision of the courts was rendered. My judgment is that the Congress should return to Mexico an amount equal to the sums thus already paid to the claimants.

The death of Queen Victoria caused the people of the United States deep and heartfelt sorrow, to which the Government gave full expression. When President McKinley died, our Nation in turn received from every quarter of the British Empire expressions of grief and sympathy no less sincere. The death of the Empress Dowager Frederick of Germany also aroused the genuine sympathy of the American people; and this sympathy was cordially reciprocated by Germany when the President was assassinated. Indeed, from every quarter of the civilized world we received, at the time of the President's death, assurances of such grief and regard as to touch the hearts of our people. In the midst of our affliction we reverently thank the Almighty that we are at peace with the nations of mankind; and we firmly intend that our policy shall be such as to continue unbroken these international relations of mutual respect and good will.

Bass Post, No. 40, and of Anthony Wayne Post, No. 271, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, Fort Wayne Ind. praying for the enactment of laws to protect the Wayne, Ind., praying for the enactment of laws to protect the nation against anarchy.

The petition is a brief one, well stated, and I ask permission that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD,

The joint committee of Sion S. Bass Post, No. 40, and Anthony Wayne Post, No. 271, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, appointed to carry out the suggestions of Comrade R. S. Robertson, that a memorial be prepared and presented to Congress praying for laws to protect the nation against anarchy, respectfully report the following memorial, and recommend that a copy be sent to each of our Senators and to our Representative in Congress, requesting the enactment of such laws: that a copy be also sent to the department commander, with the request that it be communicated to each post in the department, suggesting similar action, and also to the national commander in chief, with the request that he invite similar action in every department:

To the Congress of the United States:

To the Congress of the United States:

Sion S. Bass Post, No. 40, and Anthony Wayne Post, No. 271, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, located in the city of Fort Wayne, its membership embracing soldiers, sailors, and marines who saw service in the war for the perpetuation of the Union, who risked their lives to insure the continuance of a free government and to make the Republic secure, who believed then, as they believe now, that liberty can only be maintained through the agency of law, enforced by a powerful government, behind which is the willing support of a patriotic people, ready in peace or in war to defend the right, and who look with misgivings upon the growth of anarchistic ideas, and with horror and detestation upon the ripening of those ideas into assassination, and who hold in utter abhorrence the man whose inexcusable act plunged the world into sadness and mourning for the death of the wise, good, and faithful servant of the people, President McKinley, a man loving and loved by the people, an Executive devoted, brain, heart, and soul, to their interests, and never in years of public life doing aught to invite the animosity or the desire for revenge on the part of any of his fellow-citizens, respectfully but earnestly petition your honorable body at once to enact such legislation as may be considered most effectual to finally eradicate this deadly poison which threatens the life of the nation.

We believe that the people of the United States have, in the press, in the pupit, and on the public rostrum, expressed their almost unanimous desire for such legislation, and have pointed out the course to be pursued in order to reach the desired end.

We believe also that that portion of the people who oppose such steps have no rights that should be considered or allowed to stand in the way of the wishes of the great majority.

We believe in the personal liberty and in the freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the principles should be construed to protect and license br and its executive officers by preventing teachings and plots of assassination; by forbidding the entrance through our borders of criminals, paupers, and teachers of anarchy from other portions of the world, and providing for their deportation wherever and whenever discovered, if they chance to escape official scrutiny and seek to live among us.

We ask also that laws be enacted authorizing the prevention, by arrest and imprisonment, of any who may, by speech or published writings, seek to influence the passions of the people against our Government, its principles and its laws, or against those whom the people may choose to execute those laws and carry on the affairs of the Government.

We believe it is better to enact laws to prevent crime and protect the nation and its people rather than depend upon punitory statutes, which should, but do not, deter criminals of this class.

We believe that no good, law-abiding citizen will suffer, and that none such fears for himself should preventive laws against anarchy and anarchists be enacted and firmly executed.

We ask you to enact such laws without any more delay than their consideration requires.

Our request is not made in the spirit of revenge, of bitterness, or of ignoring the rights of man.

It is made to protect those rights, and to promote the highest aspirations of all who love our form of government, who believe in it and pray for its perpetuity.

It is made by men who gave proof of their devotion in the front of battle, to their love of country, liberty, and the supremacy of the laws, and they make it believing that it will not fall upon unwilling ears.

Senate joint memorial No. 9.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States;

We, your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent:

That the Columbia River, with the exception of the distance between The Dalles and Cello, in the State of Oregon, is navigable for boats of average tonnage from the Pacific Ocean to Kettle Falls, in the State of Washington, a distance of more than 700 miles.

That, owing to the topography of the country through which the river flows, the producers of the vast region known as the "Columbia Basin," which comprises an area of not less than 2,300,000 acres, mostly arable land, can reach the markets of the world with their products only by means of the channel of the Columbia River, and for that reason, that the removal of all obstructions to navigation therein, and the consequent reduction of transportation rates, is a matter of urgent necessity.

That the obstructions to the navigation alluded to can be overcome by the construction of a properly equipped canal and locks between the points named.

That the Government of the United States has abandoned its release for the state of the Columbia River, and the Construction of the Construction of the points named.

That the Government of the United States has abandoned its plans for a boat railway between said points.

That a careful survey and plans for such a canal and locks, with detailed drawings and estimates, have been made under the direction of Capt. W. Harts, Engineer Corps, United States Army, which show that the probable cost of such improvement would not exceed $3,969,000.

C., was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and considered, as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries, for the purpose of exhibition at the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition at Charleston, S. C., upon which there shall

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send to the Senate at the earliest practicable time an estimate of the cost of transporting to Charleston, S. INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I am directed by the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 632) to continue the Industrial Commission until February 15, 1902, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the object of reading the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania reported it from the Committee on Education and Labor, and it is being read for the information of the Senate, as he desires present consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think there will be any objection to this measure when it is understood.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we understood it pretty well at the last session, and we decided what was to be done. I would not like to consent to the passage of the bill this morning, and that is the reason why I asked for what purpose it was being read.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the commission have not quite completed their report, and this is a continuance, to give them a completed their report, and this is a continuance, to give them a few more weeks in order to get through. They are bound by law to close on the 1st day of January.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Industrial Commission authorized by "An act authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," approved June 18, 1898, and amended by "An act making appropriation for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899, is hereby continued until February 15, 1902, with all the powers and duties imposed upon it by said acts; and for salaries of commissioners, secretary, disbursing officer, stenographers, messengers, rent, miscellaneous expenses, and printing the sum of $9,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the pres-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, we had the whole matter two or three times before the Committee on Appropriations and renewed the appropriation and allowed such time as was then claimed by the commission. I think that has been done twice.

I know that in such cases it is almost impossible to tell when an entire work shall be done, and I do not object to the prolongation of time until the 15th of February if it is only to wind up their work. I understand that the bill the Senator from Pennsylvania reports provides for continuing all the powers of the commission. I do not think the commission ought to set in and renew investigations which would lead to a call for more time.

If the Senator from Pennsylvania has reason to believe that the only purpose will be to close up the report and get it ready for printing and submission, and not to go into any new hearing and investigation, I shall not object.

Mr. PENROSE. It is the only purpose of this extension to complete certain indices, without which the value of the investigation would be very largely diminished. The commission has taken an enormous mass of testimony, many thousands of pages, comprised in some 18 volumes. The indices are not finished. The hearings were closed long ago. It is not contemplated to have any further

Mr. HALE. Then I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVING NOOKSACK RIVER.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), that the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of dredging and otherwise improving the mouth of the Nooksack River, to the end that during freshets the water of said river may be enabled to pass freely into the waters of Puget Sound without overflowing the surrounding country. Should a further examination prove that it is not practicable to remove the accumulated débris from the mouth of said river, the Secretary of War is hereby directed to submit estimates of the cost of opening a new channel for the mouth of said river.

ELLEN C. ABBOTT.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Abbott, late a Senator from the State of North Carolina, $6,543.38, due him as a Senator of the United States in the Fortieth Congress, from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 24th of June, 1868, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. To print 1,850 copies will cost $783.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the order will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. LODGE. Yesterday I gave notice that I should move an amendment to Rule XIV of the standing rules of the Senate, and offered a resolution for that purpose. The amendment is a very simple one indeed. It was read yesterday; it is printed in the RECORD, and it ought to have been printed as a document and placed on our desks this morning.

The proposed rule simply permits Senators to file petitions, memorials, and bills with the Secretary of the Senate, or with the President of the Senate, instead of Senators being compelled to wait about here to offer them. It is an exact transcript of the House rule as it now stands. It divides naturally into two portions, the part covering private bills and the part covering public bills. If the Senate shall think best not to make it extend, as the House has done, to matters of public legislation, I should personally have no objection, though I think it will be as well to make it general. I do think, however, that it would be a very great relief to every Senator here if we could be allowed during the session to file petitions, private bills, such as pension bills and claims bills, with the Secretary of the Senate and avoid the consumption of time and the waiting about trying to get recognition.

I do not propose to detain the Senate, Mr. President. I merely desire to call attention to the amendment and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules. I hope that the committee will take the matter up and give it immediate consideration.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Longer to Rule.

will take the matter up and give it immediate consideration.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Lodge to Rule XIV of the standing rules of the Senate was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

the Committee on Rules, as follows:

"Senators having petitions or memorials or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Secretary during the session of the Senate, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials and bills of a private nature, except such as, in the judgment of the President of the Senate, are of an obscene or insulting nature, shall be entered on the Journal, with the names of the Senators presenting them, and the Secretary shall furnish a transcript of such entry to the official reporters of debates for publication in the RECORD.

"Any petition or memorial or private bill excluded under this rule shall be returned to the Senator from whom it was received; and petitions and private bills which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented; and an erroneous reference of a petition or private bill under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction upon the committee to consider or report the same.

"All other bills, memorials, and resolutions may, in like manner, be delivered, indorsed with the names of Senators introducing them, to the President of the Senate, to be by him referred, and the titles and references thereof and of all bills, resolutions, and documents referred under the rules, shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD of the next day, and correction in case of error of reference may be made by the Senate without debate any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred."

CRIMINAL ANARCHISTS.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I ask to call up the resolution which I offered yesterday, and which was laid upon the table subject to my call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution yesterday submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McComas], which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That Congress has power and should now by law provide:

First. That a person or persons who willfully kill, or assault with intent to kill, the President or Vice-President, or both, or any officer upon whom the powers and duties of the office of President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, shall be punished with death; the Federal courts to have jurisdiction of such offenses.

Second. Punishment by imprisonment for certain conspiracies, to be defined, and for individual threats to commit the same crime; the Federal courts to have like jurisdiction.

Fourth. Certain amendments of like import and effect to our immigration laws.

Fifth. Certain amendments of like import and effect to our naturalization

Sixth. And support the executive department in procuring an amendment to all extradition treaties similar to the provision in our convention with Belgium for the extradition of criminal anarchists.

THE PROGRESS OF ANARCHISM.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, within seven years President Carnot, Prime Minister Cánovas del Castillo, the Empress of Austria, King Humbert, and President McKinley have been foully assassinated by anarchists. Our homes are still under the shadow of national grief for our best-beloved President, and the heart of the world is with us in our sorrow.

A ruler at once so gentle, so serene, so wise, so strong, the world hitherto had never known. This brutal anarchist, of Polish descent, slew that President whom all the people most loved and who most loved all the people.

This tragedy came just when our Republic had advanced to the front rank of international powers and when we began to realize our illimitable greatness. The unspeakable assassin received capital punishment under the law of a State though his crime assailed the sovereignty of the nation, changed the head of the Government, endangered the nation's policies, and rudely disturbed the business and pursuits of the whole people.

It is humiliating to consider how impotent are our Federal laws to punish this fearful crime. These tragic assassinations in five to punish this fearful crime. These tragic assassinations in five countries, widely separate, in so short a time, show that this hidecountries, widely separate, in so short a time, show that this inde-ous crime of anarchy is increasing. In every civilized country exist evil men abnormally vain and envious, to whom brooding brings resolve, who are attracted by the scepter of power, whether han-dled by king or president, as maniacs are attracted by glitter. Conscious of their own utter worthlessness to human society, they savagely hate human institutions because their defects and failures make them hate humanity. When in murderous mood, they fix their thoughts on the head of the state, attribute to him all they detest, and persuade themselves that if they remove the head of the state, who incarnates all they hate, they can do most harm to society, law, and government. To abnormal minds possessed with this impulse to homicide envy and vanity give a peculiar fascination to the idea of assassinating a king or president. Secret societies to promote such murders inflame all such combustibles in human nature. It is from this class that the anarchists who accept the propaganda of action are recruited.

Anarchy means the unfettered self-government of the individ-ual, and, consequently, the absence of any kind of external gov-ernment. Proudhon, its first teacher, said, "Governments are the scourge of God." Max Stirner complained, "State, religion, and conscience, these despots make me a slave." Bakunin's programme for his socialist democracy in 1868 begins thus: "The alliance professes atheism; it aims at the abolition of religious services, the replacement of belief by knowledge, and divine by human justice; and the abolition of marriage as a religious and civil arrange-

This apostle naturally declared that robbery was one of the most honorable forms of national life. "The robber is a hero, the protector and avenger of the people, the irreconcilable enemy of the State." Bakunin's disciple, Netschajew, prepared the anarchists' catechism enjoining the acolyte to trouble naught about law or morality, God or religion, family or state. He must know but one science, that of destruction. For that, and for that only, he must study mechanics, physics, chemistry, and even medicine. Day and night he must have but one thought—inexorable destruction. Proudhon's famous paradox, "La propriété c'est le vol" ("Property is theft"), is like Krapotkine's motto, "Tout est à tous" ("Everything belongs to all").

A half century of international congresses, and the propaganda of anarchist literature too long delayed the golden age of atheism, of free love, of division of property, and annihilation of the family and government. The violent revolutionists were thirsting for blood. In 1881, under the guiding hands of Herr Most and the nihilist Hartmann, at the International Revolutionary Congress of London, with headquarters in London and subcommittees in London, with headquarters in London and subcommittees in Paris, Geneva, and New York, the propaganda of action was determined upon by the representatives of several hundred groups of anarchists; communication was arranged for and means of collecting money to supply poison, explosives, bombs, and weapons. Thus it was planned to hasten the social revolution. "To hasten the end proposed, the annihilation of all rulers, ministers of state, nobility, clergy, and prominent capitalists is most desirable."

way of taking up a collection. It was proved that systematic robbery was the method of raising funds for propagandists of anarchy in Austria.

Anarchism retrograded until 1880, progressed rapidly again until 1884, and then suffered a reaction; but during the past seven years it has gained strength and exhibited new features. There are no congresses, there is no central authority. Anarchists form groups. In place of international organization there is complete groups. In place of international organization there is complete understanding between groups. The group is extremely small. Five, seven, or a dozen unite in a group according to occupation, relationship, or neighborhood. Moving intermediaries alone connect the groups. Anarchist riots and huge conspiracies have ceased. The outrages of recent years have arisen from the initiative of the individual.

This circumstance and the smallness of the groups render difficult summary proceedings against anarchists by any government. The philosophic anarchists awaiting acceptance of their theories have furnished the arguments. Revolutionaries, expatriated, have furnished the arguments. Revolutionaries, expatriated, have organized and plotted wherever they could get foothold, and when driven from the Continent have taken refuge in England and our country by thousands. The leaders flit from capital to capital fomenting conspiracies to kill rulers. Their bad creed has spread to Englishmen and Americans.

Repression by governments has driven several thousand of them off of the Continent to find refuge in England and in our own country. Anarchists are in all our cities. The philosophic anarchists may be neglected after our too amiable American de-

Anarchism is one of the worst errors ever urged among men.
It is entirely contradicted by human nature and the facts of life. It is an error that may long endure. It is not a political principle. It is a cult of crime. If anarchists spread their opinions by writing and discussion only, the evils may be endured; but the criminal propaganda of action must be met by all the resources of government. Arguments emphasized by throwing bombs into theaters and cafés and killing kings and presidents must be met with condign punishment. When anarchists appeal to force they must be met with force. They arrogate to themselves the right to kill. They in turn must be killed by the state they would destroy. The severest legislation is not the wisest. Punishment does not deter these fanatics, who regard punishment as martyrdom. Many of these wild beasts seek notoriety and indirect suicide by compitting other crimes without servale to see the country. cide by committing other crimes without scruple to secure their

Again they are fatalists who believe "ideas must be watered with blood." "They are led into crime by the force, overwhelming their weakened brains, of that hypnotic suggestion which lies concealed in the social ideas they have accepted." These ideas are caught up by the weak-minded, the envious, and those dissolute men who blame society for their own faults. The inequalities of civilized life steadily increase this class of fiends. Daily, in speeches, and in the press some dectrines of energy find exin speeches and in the press some doctrines of anarchy find expression, which such speakers and writers will be astonished to discover have been borrowed from some one of the anarchists between Proudhon and Krapotkine. The great grief of all the people over the bedside or the bier of the best beloved of all our Presidents was a noble tribute to him, to our country, and our age. Here and there a degenerate citizen resented the public grief. Here and there an abnormal person applauded the assassin. These were really saturated with the spirit of anarchy. We must punish the bloody crimes of anarchy to check temporarily if we can not suppress. The state must discharge its moral duties to defend society. Surely it need not "shorten its arm" before these criminals to consider whether the guillotine or the gallows will stop this bidgers gult of crime. this hideous cult of crime.

Congress must legislate against this new peril with courage, with firmness, but also with conservatism and prudence.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR WILLFULLY KILLING OR ATTEMPTING TO KILL THE PRESIDENT.

First. We must provide that the person or persons who will-fully kill or assault with intent to kill the President or the Vice-President of the United States, or both, or any officer upon whom the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States may devolve under the Constitution and laws of the United States, are guilty of felony and shall be punished with death; shall be tried for such offense in any of the Federal district courts, to be given exclusive jurisdiction under such statute, and that the punishment shall be executed under Federal authority. Also, such statute should provide that any person or persons who shall counsel, advise, incite, or procure, or in any manner aid or assist any other person or persons to assault with intent to kill the President or Vice-President or any officer upon whom the office of President shall so devolve shall be guilty of felony, punishable with death or imprisonment for life or for a term prescribed, in the discretion of the Federal court. Accessories after the fact should be dealt with in such statute in like fashion.

This sovereign nation is not so weak that it must depend upon the varying laws of its different States to punish a criminal who assassinates, or attempts to assassinate, the President whom the Constitution declares "shall take care that the laws be faithfully

Said the Supreme Court: "The founders of the Constitution could never have intended to leave to the possibly varying decisions of the State courts what the laws of the Government it established are, what rights they confer, and what protection shall be extended to those who execute them." (Tenn. vs. Davis, 100

U.S., 266.)

The same court has said: "It is argued that the preservation of peace and good order in society is not within the powers confided to the Government of the United States, but belongs exclusively to the States. Here again we are met with the theory that the Government of the United States does not rest upon the soil and territory of the country. We think that this theory is founded on an entire misconception of the nature and powers of that Government. We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This necessarily involves the power to command obedience to its laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent.

"This power to enforce its laws and to execute its functions in all places does not derogate from the power of the State to execute its laws at the same time and in the same places. The one does not exclude the other, except where both can not be executed at the same time. In that case the words of the Constitution itself show which is to yield. 'This Constitution, and all laws which shall be made in pursuance thereof, * * * shall be the supreme law of the land.' * * *

"Without the concurrent sovereignty referred to, the National executive power would be absolutely nullified.

In reply to an overcautious and rather narrow objection, said

Justice Bradley in the same case:
"If we indulge in such impracticable views as these, and keep on refining and re-refining, we shall drive the National Government out of the United States, and relegate it to the District of Columbia, or perhaps to some foreign soil. We shall bring it back to a condition of greater helplessness than that of the old

"The argument is based on a strained and impracticable view of the nature and powers of the National Government. It must execute its powers, or it is no government. It must execute them on the land as well as on the sea, on things as well as on persons, and to do this it must necessarily have power to command obedience, preserve order, and keep the peace; and no person or power in this land has the right to resist or question its son or power in this land has the right to resist or question its authority so long as it keeps within the bounds of its jurisdiction." (Ex parte Siebold, U. S. 100, pp. 394, 395, 396.)

As time passed the court has fearlessly applied these principles, and through Justice Miller says, In re Neagle, 135 U. S., p. 69: "That there is a peace of the United States; that a man assaulting a judge of the United States while in the discharge of his duties violates that peace; that in such case the marshal of the United States stands in the same relation to the peace of the United States which the sheriff of the county does to the peace of the State of California, are questions too clear to need argument

The President is within this peace of the United States. A person assailing the President while in the discharge of his duties violates this peace. If the President is receiving the people of our country or representatives of foreign countries in any city of any of our States, he is at the time within the peace of the United States. If after he performs such function he journeys to the White House and at night when asleep the car wherein he sleeps be assailed with dynamite, such crime is still a crime against the peace of the United States, in whatever State the President's train may be. Can this be doubted? The President's duty is continuous, not pretermittent. He is always on duty; he can not delegate his highest functions. Until he dies or resigns or ends his term, he is ever taking care that the law be faithfully executed. That the Government may not pretermit, from necessity the President is on duty always and everywhere. The President is in the peace of the United States at all times and in all places in the

"The justices of the Supreme Court must attend their circuit courts," says the Supreme Court (In re Neagle, 135 U.S., 55 and 56). "In order to enable him to perform his duty, Mr. Justice Field had to travel each year from Washington City, near the Atlantic coast, to San Francisco, on the Pacific coast. In doing this he was as much in the discharge of a duty imposed upon him by law as he was while sitting in court and trying causes. * * *

"So it is impossible for a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who is compelled by the obligations of duty to be so much in Washington City, to discharge his duties of attendance on the circuit courts, as prescribed by section 610. without traveling in the usual and most convenient modes of doing it to the place where the court is to be held. This duty is as much an obligation imposed by the law as if it had said in words: 'The justices of the Supreme Court shall go from Washington City to the place where their terms are held every year.'"

It would be a narrow view to concede that the President was in the peace of the United States while performing some function of his high office, yet assert that if the President, halting on his journey to eat or sleep, should be assaulted while thus being refreshed for duty, he would be no longer within the peace of the United States, and that the person of the President as a citizen would then be only within the peace of the State where he happened to take rest from labor or food or sleep. Justice Field, traveling from his court at Los Angeles to his court at San Francisco, was eating breakfast at Fresno when assaulted by Terry. The Supreme Court brushed aside all quibbles, saying:

"We have no doubt that Mr. Justice Field, when attacked by Terry, was engaged in the discharge of his duties as circuit jus-tice of the ninth circuit and was entitled to all the protection under those circumstances which the law could give him.

"It would be a great reproach to the system of government of the United States, declared to be within its sphere sovereign and supreme, if there is to be found within the domain of its powers no means of protecting the judges, in the conscientious and faithful discharge of their duties, from the malice and hatred of those upon whom their judgments may operate unfavorably. * * *

"If a person in the situation of Judge Field could have no other guaranty of his personal safety, while engaged in the conscientious discharge of a disagreeable duty, than the fact that if he was murdered his murderer would be subject to the laws of a State, and by those laws could be punished, the security would be very insufficient. * * * We do not believe that the Government of the United States is thus inefficient, or that its Constitution and laws have left the high officers of the Government so defenseless and unprotected." (In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 58, 59.) It would be strange indeed if the President were left so defenseless and unprotected. The President's obligation to take care less and unprotected. The Fresident's obligation to take care that the laws be faithfully executed goes with him wherever he goes in the United States; the peace and power of the United States go with him everywhere that he may everywhere in the United States safely exercise the powers and perform the duties of President. Strange indeed is it if Congress did not have power that the state of the safety of death of the power of the safety of death of the safety of the safety of death of the safety of t to provide by statute a Federal crime with the penalty of death for persons who willfully kill or attempt to kill the President anywhere in the United States.

Again the same court has said that: "The United States are bound to protect against lawless violence all persons in their serv ice or custody in the course of administration of justice. duty and the correlative right of protection are not limited to the magistrates and officers charged with expounding and executing the laws." * * * (Logan vs. United States, 144 U. S., 295.)

"Although the Constitution contains no grant, general or specific, to Congress of the power to provide for the punishment of crimes except piracies and felonies on the high seas, offenses against the law of nations, treason, and counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States, no one doubts the power of Congress to provide for the punishment of all crimes and offenses against the United States, whether committed in one of the States of the Union or within territory over which Congress has plenary and exclusive jurisdiction." (Logan's case, 144 U. S.,

This principle of the supremacy of the Federal Government in This principle of the supremacy of the Federal Government in the exercise of all the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution is maintained in innumerable instances. Can it be argued that Congress may by law protect, as in the Logan case, a person accused of crime, or, as in the Quarles case (158 U. S., p. 536), protect against lawless violence a citizen informing Federal officers of a violation of law; protect election officers in the States; protect deputy marshals and revenue officers; protect judges of the Federal courts and set the powerless to pass laws to protect the life of the courts, and yet be powerless to pass laws to protect the life of the President and Vice-President of the United States and of those officers on whom devolve the powers and duties of the office of President under the Constitution and laws?

Congress may go further—it may enact laws to protect the high executive officers; it may even protect Senators and Members of Congress. I am convinced it is wise to legislate now to protect the head of the state—the President and Vice-President and the officers on whom the office of President and vice-President and the officers on whom the office of President shall devolve—and now go no further. It may be prudent to declare that this statute is not to be construed to impair the protection already afforded by the law to other officials of the United States.

Mr. President, I believe I have shown that we have ample power to pass the statute I propose. The crime named is different from treason. Murder as defined at the common law is one of the incident of the crime but not the whole gripe. It is time for incidents of the crime, but not the whole crime. It is time for Congress to define and provide a penalty for this statutory high crime of anarchists. To complete this statute, as I have said, accessories before the fact should be punished with death or life imprisonment. Accessories after the fact should be punished by imprisonment for life or for a term of years.

CRIMINAL CONSPIRACIES OF ANARCHISTS AND THE LIKE.

Second. Congress should enact a law to give Federal courts jurisdiction to try and punish by imprisonment for a term of years two or more who confederate and conspire to murder the President or Vice-President, or both, or any of the officers in line of succession to the President, or two or more who confederate and conspire to advise, incite, or procure another or others to will-fully kill the President or Vice-President, or both, or any of the officers in line of succession to the President, or two or more persons who advise or incite or procure any person or persons to overthrow or to attempt to overthrow the Federal Government or destroy it by force and violence by willfully killing or assaulting with intent to kill the President or Vice-President, or both, or any of the officers in line of succession to the President.

This statute should make it a crime, with penalty of imprisonment for a term of years, for any person to knowingly become or continue to be a member of any association, club, or assembly where any person or persons advise or incite any of the offenses before mentioned.

Such statute should make it a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term of years for any person or persons to threaten or to speak, write, print, or publish any words or declarations counto speak, write, print, or publish any words or declarations counseling, advising, or inciting other persons to willfully kill or to assault with intent to kill the President or Vice-President, or both, or any officer in the line of succession to the President. The prohibitions, crimes, and penalties of the postal laws to suppress fraudulent and lottery schemes should by amendment be extended to include the sending through the mails written or printed apprehist decreases or personnel counseling or advisor. printed anarchist documents or newspapers counseling or advising the crimes in this statute mentioned, or counseling or advising the subversion or destruction by force and violence of the Government of the United States

The Supreme Court said in the Rapier case (143 U.S.) that the refusal of the Post-Office Department to carry lottery publications and lottery circulars was not a violation of the constitutional right of free speech and free press; that Congress had a right to determine what character of mail should be carried by the postal authorities, and that it had a right to refuse to carry matter prejudicial to good morals or to the public peace.

But this statute would be incomplete unless it included one other feature. It should make it a crime punishable with a term of imprisonment for two or more, while in the United States, to conspire and confederate to commit any one of the crimes mentioned upon any president, king, or other head of a state of any republic, kingdom, or empire, or other sovereign state, or for any person to solicit, persuade, or propose to any other person to murder the head of a state of any republic, kingdom, empire, or other sovereign state. International comity requires this. No one doubts that a conspiracy in one nation to kill the head of another state is an offense against the law of nations. In England, in 1799, certain English subjects prosecuted for a libel on Paul I of Russia were punished. In 1803 Jean Peltier, a French refugee, was found guilty of libeling Napoleon, the First Consul. How much more reason, under the comity of nations, to punish a conspiracy in one state to kill the head of another state! other feature. It should make it a crime punishable with a term

Congress is expressly authorized "to define and punish offenses against the law of nations." International law, says Kent and Story and the Supreme Court, is part of the law of the land. In United States vs. Arjona (120 U. S., 484, 487) this court said: "The law of nations requires every national government to use due diligence to prevent a wrong being done within its own dominion to another nation with which it is at peace or to the people thereof. * * * * But if the United States can require this of another that other may require it of them, because internations. this of another, that other may require it of them, because international obligations are of necessity reciprocal in their nature. A right secured by the law of nations to a nation or its people is one the United States, as the representatives of this nation, are one the United States, as the representatives of this hatton, are bound to protect. Consequently, a law which is necessary and proper to afford this protection is one that is needed to carry into execution a power conferred by the Constitution on the Government of the United States exclusively."

of foreign governments. If it be our duty by international law to prevent counterfeiting the head of a foreign president or king on a bank note, how much greater our duty to prevent a plot on our soil to blow off with dynamite the real head of such foreign president or king. In sections 5336, 5508, 5509, and 5518, Revised Statutes, we have conspiracy laws in force, under which some of the bloodthirsty talkers of anarchist groups in Paterson, in New York, and in Illinois could now be indicted, and if convicted

EXCLUSION AND DEPORTATION OF ANARCHISTS.

Third. We should enact laws to expel and to exclude alien We shall at this session with unanimity reenact the Chinese-exclusion acts. I will cheerfully vote to exclude the hordes of China and prevent the competition of Chinese cheap labor. Far more readily will I vote to exclude alien anarchists. To this subject I will soon return. We have alien anarchists here now. We have naturalized and even native anarchists in our midst. With these we must contend in other fashion. Why should we not, as we may expel alien anarchists for cause?

The "right of asylum" is called in international law an imperfect right. It is at most, as Dr. Woolsey calls it, only a "moral claim."

Hall (in International Law, 4th ed., 223, 224) says, "If a country decides that certain classes of foreigners are dangerous to its tranquillity * * * and therefore individual foreigners or whole classes of foreigners who have already been admitted into the country are subjected to expulsion, in such cases the propriety of the conduct of the expelling government must be judged with reference to the circumstances of the moment.'

Since all nations of Europe now expel anarchists, and even in England the only question ever raised has been whether the power to expel aliens could be exercised without the consent of Parliament, we do not risk international disputes if we expel alien anarchists. archists. They all do it. It is a far cry to the disputes over our alien law of 1798. No one would now urge that sweeping meas-Quite near is the Chinese-exclusion act. It is approved by the nation. It has been approved by the Supreme Court.

In Nishimura Ekiu vs. United States, 142 U.S., 659, that court said, "It is an accepted maxim of international law that every sovereign nation has the power, as inherent in sovereignty and essential to self-preservation, to forbid the entrance of foreigners into its dominions, or to admit them only in such cases and upon such conditions as it may see fit to prescribe. In the United States this power is vested in the National Government, to which the Constitution has committed the entire control of international relations in peace as well as in war. It belongs to the political department of the Government."

In Fong Yue Ting vs. United States, 149 U. S., 707, the court added, "The right of a nation to expel or deport foreigners who have not been naturalized or taken any steps toward becoming citizens of the country rests upon the same grounds and is as absolute and unqualified as the right to prohibit and prevent their entrance into the country."

Mr. STEWART. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Is the naturalization of an anarchist any protection? It having been obtained by fraud, can it not be set aside for that reason? Has the Senator covered that case?

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I had framed in respect to naturalized citizens a provision in my proposed statute providing that when a naturalized citizen was convicted of conspiracy or any of the individual offenses I a moment ago defined, after serving his imprisonment, he should then be deported from this country to the port of his departure for this country; but I concluded to omit this provision for resears I will not now discuss. Here to omit this provision for reasons I will not now discuss. Hereafter we can meet that difficulty by providing, upon conviction of any of the offenses I have mentioned, for the punishment of such alien by imprisonment and in addition by deportation, for he would have forfeited his right to citizenship and deportation would be a justly added punishment for a perjured anarchist immigrant,

In Revised Statutes, section 5395, it is already provided that where any oath is made under any law relating to the naturalization of aliens any person who knowingly swears falsely shall be punished by long imprisonment and heavy fine. Section 5392 provides like penalty for such perjurers. The Attorney-General should direct his district attorneys to indict anarchists in Chicago and other cities who have a police record in Europe as avowed anarchists and have been naturalized by such perjury in swearing allegiance to our Constitution and laws.

Mr. President, I will proceed with the Fong Yue Ting case I was "In 1856 Mr. Marcy wrote, 'Every society possesses the undoubted right to determine who shall compose its members, and it is exercised by all nations, both in peace and war. A memorable example of the exercise of this power in time of peace was the A memorable passage of the alien law in the year 1798.'

"In 1869 Mr. Fish wrote: 'The control of the people within its limits and the right to expel from its territory persons who are dangerous to the peace of the state are too clearly within the essential attributes of sovereignty to be seriously contested.'

(Wharton's Int. Law Digest, sec. 206.)
"Phillimore says (1 Phill. Int. Law, 3d ed., chap. 10, sec. 220):
'It is a received maxim of international law that the government of a state may prohibit the entrance of strangers into the country, and may therefore regulate the conditions under which they shall be allowed to remain in it, or may require and compel their departure from it."

Justice Gray cites Vattel, Ortalan, and Bar to like effect, and distinguishes between three modes of removing a person from this country. "'Transportation' is by way of punishment of one convicted of an offense against the laws of the country. 'Extradition' is the surrender to another country of one accused of an offense against its laws, there to be tried, and, if found guilty, punished. 'Deportation' is the removal of an alien out of the country simply because his presence is deemed inconsistent with the public welfare, and without any punishment being im-with the public welfare, and without any punishment being imposed or contemplated, either under the laws of the country out of which he is sent or under those of the country to which he is taken."

Mr. Justice Gray, for the court, proceeds to say: "The power to exclude or to expel aliens, being a power affecting international relations, is vested in the political departments of the Government, and is to be regulated by treaty or by act of Congress and to be executed by the avecutive authority according to the to be executed by the executive authority according to the regulations so established. * * * Congress might intrust the final lations so established. * * * Congress might intrust the final determination of the facts to an executive officer, and, if it did so, his order was due process of law." Finally, "The power to exclude aliens and the power to expel them rests upon one foundation, are derived from one source, are supported by the same reasons, and are in truth but parts of one and the same power. The power of Congress, therefore, to expel, like the power to exclude, aliens or any specified class of aliens from the country may be exercised entirely through executive officers, or Congress may call in the aid of the judiciary to ascertain any contested facts on which an alien's right to be in the country has been made by Congress to depend." (149 U. S., 707-714.)

The statute empowering executive officers to expel or deport alien anarchists should be brief and simple. I suggest the substance. Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall have reason to believe that for the preservation of the peace of the United States or for the prevention of crime within or without the United or for the prevention of crime within or without the United States against the Government of the United States, or any gov-ernment with which the United States is at peace, it is expedient to remove or deport therefrom any alien anarchist (defining anarchist) who may be in the United States, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to cause an order to be served upon such alleged alien anarchist directing that such alien anarchist shall depart the United States within a time to be in such order specifically. fied, and if such alien anarchist shall knowingly and willfully refuse or neglect to obey such order, or shall be found in the United States after the service of such order and after the expiration of the time limited and specified in such order, such alien anarchist shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in a district court of the United States (and said district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of offenses under this act) such alien anarchist shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and shall suffer imprisonment not exceeding three months for the first offense and not exceeding one year for the second or any subsequent offense; provided always that nothing in this act contained shall affect any person belonging to the diplomatic or consular service of any foreign state or nation, nor any person belonging to the domestic establishment of any foreign ambas-sador or public minister, nor any person attendant upon the same, nor any alien under 16 years of age.

Under such a statute the Commissioner-General of Immigration should be authorized, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, to use the inspectors and agents of his office and the like officers employed under the Chinese-exclusion acts to find and report to the Secretary of the Treasury all such alien anarchists, who could deport such as he found should be deported under the statute and under such regulations and rules as the statute should empower him to establish.

AMEND IMMIGRATION LAWS.

Fourth. The first section of the immigration act of March 3, 1891, should be amended by adding to the classes of aliens to be excluded from admission into the United States "criminal anarch-This term must be carefully defined in the act. I suggest that "criminal anarchist shall be construed to mean one who that "criminal anarchist shall be construed to mean one who advocates the destruction or overthrow by violence either of all governments or of the Government of the United States."

The famous Elisée Reclus is an anarchist. He is a man of pacific life and of unrivaled learning. Being an anarchist, he is an atheist, opposes the institution of marriage and of property, desires the destruction of law and all government. We must distinguish the anarchist of opinion from the anarchist of violence. The first class held that free association will be the religious force of society. class hold that free association will be the ultimate form of society. Their passion is for absolute individual freedom. It is individuality run mad. Reclus has not sanctioned murder and dynamite outrages to forward his opinions. Under our safeguard of free speech it may be best to suffer such to believe and to teach anarchism. When others who believe as Elisée Reclus believes teach the same hideous doctrine and also teach the indispensability of poison, dynamite, and the dagger, and the murder of rulers, to hasten the destruction of all government, surely these terrorists, as they call themselves, are "criminal anarchists," and should be as they call themselves, are "criminal anarchists," and should be excluded as immigrants when they come to our ports. The immutable law of the human conscience classes them with criminals who have no right to share our country with us.

In each country from which we admit emigrants one port of departure should be designated. The consul there should have discretion to grant or refuse a passport to an emigrant upon conditions are refused as the consultation of the ditions approved by the amended law excluding anarchists among others. All immigrants without such passports to be returned on the vessel whereon such immigrants come to our port of entry.

Authorize the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make regulations to carry into effect this statute, and to employ twelve special agents to investigate in the country of origin the fitness of an agents to investigate in the applicant for a consul's passport.

This will decrease immigration and reduce, of course, our supplies who mingle with them. If the time should steam come when Congress will make it unprofitable to ocean steamship lines to carry a single immigrant, such act will do more good to the American people than all our devices to exclude undesirable immigrants.

AMEND NATURALIZATION LAWS. Fifth. We should amend the naturalization laws to restrict immigration. In Revised Statutes, section 2165, in the first clause, In Mevised Statutes, section 2165, in the first clause, I would not permit an alien to declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States until after he had resided therein five years. I would amend the third clause of the same section by requiring ten years' residence in the United States and ability to read and write the English language to the satisfaction of the court before an alien should be admitted to citizenship. It is easy for anarchists to evade our immigration laws. If they remain aliens we can deport them ravidly. If the long probation remain aliens we can deport them rapidly. If the long probation for citizenship and the test of literacy should cut off one-half of the annual immigration, how fortunate for the future of our country.

EXTRADITION OF CRIMINAL ANARCHISTS BY SERIES OF NEW EXTRADITION TREATIES.

Finally, we should in all our extradition treaties hereafter incorporate this clause now in our convention of 1882 with Belgium: "An attempt against the life of the head of a foreign government, or against that of any member of his family, when such attempt comprises the act either of murder or assassination or of poisoning, shall not be considered a political offense or an act connected with such an offense." Our existing extradition treaties should all be so modified, and the reciprocal stipulation that like attempts upon the life of our President and Vice-President and other officers in line of succession to the Presidency should not be considered a political offense should be inverted to facilitate the sidered a political offense should be inserted to facilitate the extradition of criminal anarchists upon our demand.

The tragic death of so many rulers of states by the hand of anarchist assassins in the past seven years assures us that all nations may more speedily amend extradition treaties to cover this important resource of international law for the suppression of anarchy.

M. Alberic Rolin, in Twenty-sixth Revue de Droit International (1894), 151, discusses comparative legislation to suppress anarchist outrages. He concludes that the most simple and rational international measure consists in the extension of extradition to this species of crime.

One of the rational bases of this institution is the common interest of nations. It is not only right—it is their interest that causes them to seek a mutual assistance for good administration The very nature of the wrongs and crimes here of penal justice. in question, their extraterritorial and far-reaching effect, their systematic organization, and the unusual facilities of flight afforded the criminal, thanks not only to the rapidity of actual communication, but by reason of the relations which he holds with criminals of the same kind in a foreign country, the chance he has of making new attempts from a distance—a crowd of circumstances demonstrate the necessity of extending to these violations of law the principle of extradition. Perhaps it may be necessary to go still further and consider these crimes as crimes against humanity, capable of being punished everywhere, as

Difference of institutions and modes of procedure may delay or defeat an international compact to repress anarchism. The extradition of criminal anarchists is a speedy and practical international measure of repression. Thus I have stated and urged six propositions to be enacted as law against anarchism-prudent,

I have shown that this legislation is within the power of Congress to enact; I do not doubt that it is constitutional and sanctioned by international law; that it would be practical, effective, and easily enforced. Further than this we should not go during this Congress. A generation hence I fear men will still want Senting ators here in our stead to enact legislation against anarchy. It is not an easy question. After a half century of growth anarchy is not so easily stamped out as many men seem to think. Still we must punish it. No government has ceased to punish murder because centuries of punishment have failed to make an end of We must punish murder, we must punish anarchism, for the safety of society.

FREE SPEECH AND FREE PRESS.

I am aware of the popular resentment against newspapers and speakers of a certain type. I give due weight to the public opinion which favors the suppression of their inflammatory and ofttimes anarchistic speeches, cartoons, and writings, yet I would not legislate against such practices. I would punish speaking and writing only when it directly counseled or incited or procured others to willfully kill the head of the state.

Congress is forbidden by the first amendment to the Constituto make a law abridging the freedom of speech or of the "Under the shadow of a great sorrow Congress and all the people are of one mind and purpose to punish, and, so far as possible, to repress anarchism. All Senators on this floor have a common desire and a like purpose.

Such unanimity would be disturbed by serious differences over methods of achieving the common purpose. In the eighteenth century in England, and in our Republic, the battle for free speech and a free press was fought and won. The principles then involved have done their perfect work, and that work can never In the twentieth century the license of speech and of the press may prove a real danger; yet the party war cries of that far-off time still animate the common thought. Many are alert to guard that freedom of speech and press which the Constitution has forever protected. Let us not needlessly vex those who honestly apprehend an assault upon things invulnerable.

It was never intended or supposed that this first amendment could be invoked as a protection of the country of the cou could be invoked as a protection against legislation for the punishment of acts inimical to the peace, good order, and morals of society. Practically unanimous legislation by Congress against anarchism will induce the States to supplement Federal laws by laws of their own. Such legislation here does not prevent a State from providing for the punishment of the same thing, for here the acts against which we would make laws may be, and in most instances are, offenses against the authority of a State as well as that of the United States. (U. S. vs. Arjona, 120 U. S., 487.) OUR PEOPLE AND THEIR GOVERNMENT.

We are told that our Federal Government is not strong, and that European governments only are strong to stamp out anarchism. I have shown that the Constitution permits us to make laws at least strong enough to make successful war on anarchism.

In our Government by the people we have added potency against this hideous creed of crime surpassing like resources in the governments of Europe.

Public opinion when aroused gathers force and volume it can not attain in their countries. Our institutions and traditions, our faiths, our ideals—the life of our people—aid us in this struggle.

Anarchists make war on religion, and their atheist assassin murdered our Chief. Our Christian President died like an apostle, and quickened religious faith in our land of churches and church-going people.

Anarchists say property is theft. In no country are the people more tender of property, more tenacious of justice. Anarchists would abolish the family and marriage. More than any other land ours is the land of pure homes.

In no other tongue or country are the words mother," "wife," "child" sweeter or more sacred. "father."

Anarchists deride patriotism, the oldest of virtues. other soil in every generation have the youth of any country with such frolic welcome met death under the flag of the land they love.

Anarchism's chief object is the overthrow of government by violence. Our Government was constructed by the people who supported it, by liberty and justice. Until these separate it can never fall.

Americans residing abroad, "shrunk into the polished littleness Americans residing abroad, "shrunk into the poinsned littleness of modern elegance," may disparage it. The unworthy at home may depreciate it. Blind partisans of either party may defame it. In times of distress the discontented may find fault with it. At all times the body of the plain people, whom Lincoln loved and upon whom McKinley leaned, are its unfailing defenders. This great people, facing the hideous peril of anarchism, taught by their sorrow to think straight and see clear, now rate more highly than ever the value of their Government, prize more than ever its benefits, which are theirs to enjoy and theirs to transmit. More than ever before are now revealed to them its blessings, its glory, and its power.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland a question in regard to one branch of his speech.

I have listened, as doubtless every Senator has, with a great deal of pleasure to the able and exhaustive speech which he has just delivered. In one part of that speech he made some reference to certain cases in which he would favor a submission to the courts to pass upon certain questions which might arise in reference to the right of an alien to enter this country. I believe it has been held time and again by the Supreme Court of the United States that the question as to the right to prohibit an alien from coming to this country is one that may be constitutionally left to the administrative officers of the Government, and, in fact, in our existing Chinese legislation that is the case, even to the extent of providing that where a person of Chinese descent, claiming to be a citizen of the United States, attempts to enter this country on the ground that he is not a Chinese citizen or a citizen of some foreign country, but that he is a citizen of our own country—in other words, that he was born here—he is compelled to submit his case to the collector of the port at which he applies for admission; and if the decision of the collector is against his right to come in, he can not apply to the court through the medium of habeas corpus or any other judicial proceeding, and the courts have no power in the premises. The decision of the collector as to such person is the end of the law, except by an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury.

What I wish to inquire, therefore, of the Senator from Maryland, as I did not understand very fully his statement on that subject, is, what are the particular instances in which he would refer, through the medium of the writ of habeas corpus or otherwise, the question of the right to come into this country to the courts?

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I quite agree with the distinguished Senator from Oregon. He has clearly stated what I understand to be the law, settled in the case of Fong Yue Ting, which I discussed. The Congress can provide machinery whereby the political department of the Government may exclude or expel an align and it is due process of law when that department of the an alien, and it is due process of law when that department of the Government uses that machinery. As the Supreme Court said in 142 U. S., "It belongs to the political department."

I proposed that if the alien anarchist neglected or refused to obey the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, or ekided the execution of such order deporting him, or should return after such deportation, then the alien anarchist could be arrested, and, on conviction of refusal or neglect to obey such order of the Secretary of the Treasury, should be imprisoned for a short time, and for a second offense—returning a second time, for instance—be imprisoned for a longer term. If there had been an error of identity, the wrong man, if ordered into banishment upon such trial, might be relieved from deportation. I would not obstruct the executive department by any other judicial intervention. But I agree with the Senator that Congress could put this power to deport aliens in the hands of the executive department alone and that in such cases their procedure is due process of law.

Mr. MITCHELL. It was not for the purpose of criticising the Senator at all; I simply wished to understand his precise position.

Mr. McCOMAS. I am very glad the Senator asked me the question. The power of the political department to deport such question. The power of the political department to deport such persons without the law's delay is of great practical help in ridding us of alien anarchists. Deportation is banishment, and banishment, like outlawry, long unused as punishment for crime, is a swift and sure way to drive out anarchists. Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to say only two or three words on this question, and perhaps it is as good a time as any to say them now, in order that they may be put upon the record. I shall take but a moment.

I agree very heartily with the honorable Senator who has just spoken, I think, in everything he has said, and I heard nearly everything he said. But the difficulty, after we have perfected our legislation in all respects which the Senator desires, is that in almost all the cases which have occurred in modern times the assassin is willing to give his life to accomplish his result. There is your trouble. The wickedness of the crime does not deter a man who has persuaded himself, whether insane or fanatic or misguided, that the act is virtuous, and that it is more virtuous because he has to encounter the loathing and horror of mankind. The assassin of William of Orange, the great champion of religious liberty, welcomed the torture with joy, and never was there a Christian martyr who exhibited a loftier heroism, a sublimer joy in death, than the author of this horrible crime which has shocked all ages.

Now, every assassin of a President of the United States, nearly every assassin of a foreign ruler or person of a reigning house, like the Austrian Empress, has expected early and certain death. So the multiplication of punishment for the act itself has not helped you a great deal. You have got to do something further. Of course the prevention of teaching which the Senator proposes as a large part of his scheme does a great deal. In the beginning, perhaps, before they can become perverted converts of these doctrines, they will not be exposed to the evil influence of fanatical teachers. That will help a good deal. But it has seemed to me that if it were practicable, and I believe it is practicable, another remedy would also go further than any proposed. If there can be, by the common consent of civilized nations, a tract on the earth's surface, an island or continent somewhere, which can be hemmed in, let every person who has counseled not only the killing of a ruler or a public officer, but the overthrow of human government, and has advocated the right to resist all social govgovernment, and has advocated the right to resist all social government by force (and certainly you can punish that if you for an punish the offense of attacking and accomplishing the murder of an individual), be deported to that spot, and let the anarchist have an object lesson and let the world have an object lesson of anarchy. Let the disease be cured by the old simple process of inoculation. Inoculate them with a little anarchy—with an anarchistic government there.

Of course you can not touch men's thoughts, of course you can not touch mere theories, the advocating of which does not involve the counseling of offenses, but the advocacy of resisting government by violence as well as the advocacy of slaying rulers by violence certainly every civilized government can reach.

I suppose under our Constitution banishment is a lawful punishment. I presume the cruel and unusual punishments mentioned in the Constitution do not mean those that are unusual in the United States, because we had not any United States when we formed the Constitution, but unusual in the practice of civilized formed the Constitution, but unusual in the practice of civilized nations. If all the nations of the world having lawful governments would agree together under suitable limitations for fair trials and that every such person should be taken to a spot where there is no government and set down there and compelled to stay there, that, it seems to me, if it turned out to be practicable, would be a nearly perfect cure. Certainly they can not complain. We are sending them to what they deem a paradise, a Utopia. A man who denies the lawfulness of property is placed simply where he finds everybody agreeing with him. A man who denies the lawfulness of government is placed where he finds everybody the lawfulness of government is placed where he finds everybody agreeing with him. It is neither a hardship, nor a cruelty, nor an injustice, nor a wrong. I think persons who would counsel anarchy, the overthrow of government, or any other crime, and run the risk of trial and punishment at home, would hold their tongues profoundly if they found the whole world ready to sentence them to a deportation like this.

LETTERS OF JEFFERSON ON CUBAN ANNEXATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba, and ordered to be printed:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in response to the resolution of the Senate of March 2, 1901, requesting him "to send to the Senate copies of letters written by Thomas Jefferson to President Madison and President Monroe concerning the annexation of Cuba." PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a series of resolutions unanimously adopted by the board of directors of the Grand Army Hall and Memorial Association, of Chicago, Ill. I ask that the body of the paper be printed in the RECORD, as it refers to the death of President McKinley.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks that the body of the resolutions be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The resolutions are as follows:

there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The resolutions are as follows:

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the board of directors of the Grand Army Hall and Memorial Association of Illinois, at Chicago, September 21, 1901:

William McKinley, the twenty-fifth President of the United States of America, was cruelly slain on the 6th day of September, 1901.

The universal grief caused by the malicious deed which took from the world this good, wise, courageous, and lovable man is sincerely shared by the members of the Grand Army Hall and Memorial Association of Illinois. We come as loyal citizens of our beloved Republic to this temple dedicated to patriotism, recognizing the authority as well as the necessity of human government, with an unfaltering trust in the supreme reign of moral laws and in the final triumph of righteousness throughout the earth in this hour of humiliation and grave anxiety, deepened by inexpressible sorrow, to manifest our loving regard for a departed comrade, to emphasize our unmeasured respect for one who was lately the honored and beloved Chief Magistrate of the nation, to acknowledge the priceless benefits which have resulted to our common country from the faithful services of an exalted character, and to express our sense of indignation for the malign influences and malevolent purposes which led to the most inexcusable and villainous assassination known in the history of civilized man.

To speak in praise of McKinley would be only to utter exclamations of gratitude for benefactions which flow from a virtuous life. In everything which centers in the fabric of a great and good character the life and career of William McKinley furnishes one of the brightest and noblest examples. As patriot, soldier, citizen, statesman, and Christian man, he leaves to his country and to the world a record and a fame among the most illustrious and exalted of all those who by the exercise of courage, wisdom, patience, and integrity have achieved the highest stations in h weep for one who was beloved. And so, at last, "having served his own generation, he fell on sleep."

But. looking back upon the record of our country for the past forty years, we feel it our imperative duty to piedge anew our fealty to the Government and institutions which, in common with our stricken comrade in arms, we helped as citizen-soldiers of the Republic to preserve. And now as citizens marching with uncovered heads beneath the flag of our country, so greatly loved and honored and so high advanced by William McKinley, and having no thought or hope or wish but that the rights, liberties, and privileges of the American citizen shall be adequately protected, we call upon all those in authority everywhere to hearken unto the impressive lesson of the sad event which calls us together here.

The right to life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness are inalienable. They are the necessary incidents of every human being, and for the purpose of protecting all men in the enjoyment of these priceless blessings guaranteed by the Constitution of our country the Government which we honor and respect was instituted by the fathers of the nation. That Government and all the sacred purposes for which it was created we cherish; but the spirit and purpose of all those who would destroy or subvert its objects, cripple or restrain its powers, molest or murder its lawful officers and servants, we denounce and condemn to the uttermost. Anarchy has no right, legally or morally, to hide its monster's head beneath our flag and live.

The spirit of anarchy originates in sin, feeds on hate, fattens on revenge, and revels in infamy. Its teachings and its acts alike are criminal. Its teachers and its disciples have no motive but destruction, and their sole aim is to blot out civilization and crush forever all semblance of social order and individual right. A community of anarchists is a den of vipers, and its breath is the poison of death to everything among men that is pure, holy, sweet, tender, righteous, and merciful. The victious sp

The honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the seventh legislative assembly of the State of Montana, respectfully represent:

1. That on October 15, 1892, by proclamation of the President of the United States, a portion of the then Crow Indian Reservation was thrown open to settlement.

2. That there was excepted and reserved in the said proclamation certain considerable and choice tracts from which any member of said tribe of Crow Indians was permitted to select a one-quarter section of land, to be then allotted by the Government to the said Indian in severalty.

3. That a considerable number of segregated and isolated tracts of said lands so excepted by proclamation of the President still remain unselected by and unallotted to any Indians.

4. That said segregated and isolated remaining unselected and unallotted tracts are surrounded by improved ranches and farms artificially irrigated and in a high state of productive cultivation, and are themselves choice agricultural lands, greatly desired by settlers, who would irrigate, cultivate, and improve same if permitted so to do, settling upon them under the provision of the United States homestead laws.

Wherefore your memorialists earnestly pray and urge your honorable bodies for the necessary action and legislation to procure this anomalous condition of said tracts, and speedily open the same up for the settlement of our citizens.

Your memorialists, the general assembly of the State of Colorado, would respectfully represent that.

Whereas there are within the confines of the State of Colorado aboriginal antiquities and prehistoric ruins, situate on the public lands of the United States, the value of which from a scientific and historic standpoint is rapidly being destroyed by ruthless vandals:

Therefore your memorialists pray your honorable body immediately by proper enactment to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to cause surveys to be made to show the location of these ruins, to the end that legislation may at once be enacted for the permanent protection thereof and the setting aside of a reservation containing these historic ruins, the tracts to be thenceforth reserved from sale and kept as the property of the United States and to be not subject to entry, settlement, or occupation until further provided by law.
